An exceedingly pleasant gathering took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Patterson, First St., on Monday night, when about sixty of their neighbors met together for the purpose of making a presentation to Mr. and Mrs. James Torrance, prior to their removal to their future home in Caledon. Rev. W. M. Morris, pastor of St. Andrew's Church, was voted to the chair, after which Mrs. D. MacPherson was called on to read the following address :—

Orangeville, March 23rd, 1914.

Mr. and Mrs. James Torrance.

Dear Friends :

On learning that you are about to leave town, we, your friends and neighbors, take this opportunity of bidding you farewell. We regret that you are leaving us. You have always been kind and neighborly and helpful in every good cause.

May divine guidance be given you in making your lives a blessing to the community in which you are about to reside and in the formation of new friendships. Our hope is that success, prosperity, health and happiness may be granted you and your family in the future.

In token of our esteem and respect as a bond of friendship we will ask you to accept this dozen knives and forks.

Signed on behalf of your Orangeville friends

Mrs. John Patterson
Mrs. Amos Fuller.

At the proper time Mrs. John Patterson presented Mr. and Mrs. Torrance with a dozen silver knives and forks. The recipients were taken quite by surprise, but Mr. Torrance replied briefly in acknowledgment of the kindness of their neighbors and the sorrow they feel at leaving Orangeville. A delightful musical programme followed, the numbers consisting of a solo by Miss Bea Harshaw and selections by St. Andrew's S. S. orchestra. A dainty lunch was served before the gathering dispersed.

Mr. and Mrs. Torrance expect to move to their new home on the Centre Road, Caledon, early in April.

Resolution of Condolence.

To Mr. Joseph Pierson and Family.

Resolved that as a Royal Orange Lodge we give expression to our feelings of regret in view of the bereavement that has befallen us in the death of our esteemed brother, the late James Pierson, whom God, in His infinite goodness and wisdom, has taken to the Grand Lodge above. As a member of our Order he has proved himself a true and worthy brother, always willing to offer assistance and aid to a distressed brother and ever proving himself to be possessed of the virtues of Love, Fraternity and Fidelity. His life showed that he felt it to be his imperative duty to consistently comply with the sacred obligations of our Order. He has been removed from our midst, and we bow in humble submission knowing that the Divine Master cannot err. We extend to you and your beloved family our heartfelt sympathy and condolence in this the hour of your sad bereavement and can fully assure you that your sorrows to a great extent are our sorrows and as you weep in loneliness you have our kindest Christian regard and brotherly sympathy.

NEURALGIA

"NEARLY DROVE ME WILD, UNTIL I TOOK KEPHALDOL"

Mr. Thomas Cooper, Ludley, Sussex, England, was almost frantic with Neurolgia, when he first took a KEPHALDOL Tablet.

"I am nearly 74 years of age and have suffered with Neuralgia nearly all my life. A friend told me about KEPHALDOL and I had my people get me a 2s. package. I took two tablets as soon as I got them and quickly received relief. It was joy."

So great became the fame of KEPHALDOL Tablets abroad that their reputation spread to this country. The demand for KEPHALDOL grew so rapidly that arrangements were made to establish a Canadian office and supply all the druggists. These wonderful tablets, the prescription of Vienna's famous nerve specialist, Herr Doctor Stohr, have brought welcome relief to hundreds suffering from Neuralgia and Headaches, the ravages of La Grippe, rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago, Pain in the Back, and in fact any pain.

Jeffers, the druggist, has special prices on stock salts and sulphur—ask for them.

DO IT NOW

While the majority of our subscribers have already paid their subscriptions for 1914, quite a large number have neglected to attend to this important matter. Nearly all intend to pay, but the amount is small and it is either forgotten or neglected. It is so easy to forget small matters. Next month we purpose sending notices to all who are still in arrears. Why not save us the trouble and expense of sending out these notices? If you intend to pay—and we take it for granted that you do—you can pay just as well without as with a notice and, by doing so, save the publishers a good deal of unnecessary trouble. Every subscriber can tell how his subscription stands by consulting his address label. If YOU are one of those who have not paid for 1914, do not forget or neglect any longer. Put yourself right with the publishers by paying now.

High School Convocation.

The annual Convocation of the Orangeville High School will take place in the Opera House on Friday night. During the evening the Literary Society will present a revised and thoroughly modern version of Shakespeare's great Play, "The Merchant of Venice." The plot, as revised for this production, contains many features of absorbing interest. The Play will be presented by a large and capable cast, with appropriate costumes, scenery and stage accessories. Diplomas and certificates will be presented to the successful 1912-13 students between acts. St. Mark's orchestra has been engaged to provide music during the evening. Program at 8.15 sharp. Another Hotel in Town

Orangeville has seven hotels now, where formerly there were only six. On Monday Mr. J. E. Booth, who was compelled to vacate the Queen's, opened a new hotel in the Pattullo building immediately east of that hostelry. Mr. Booth is fitting up the new premises as rapidly as possible, and judging from the trade he is doing this week is going to make a strong bid for the commercial trade, which was done largely by the Queen's. Mr. R. J. Bennett, the new landlord of the Queen's, moved in on Monday, and is also hustling to corral the drummers. Needless to say the rivalry between the two houses is of the keenest description and there is no love lost on either side.

Charity Society Notes

Those interested in the work it is doing will remember that early this year the Charity Society spent $100 decorating the stage and furnishing the dressing rooms in the Opera House. This money, it should perhaps be explained, was raised for the purpose of renovating the hall when the Society was organized three years ago and has been kept on hand since then for this purpose.

Since December the Society has expended $75 for groceries, meat and clothing for the poor of the town.

The members of the Society wish to tender their hearty thanks to the Caledon Dramatic Club and all others who contributed toward the success of the concert on Tuesday evening March 17th. The Society had about $20 to the good after meeting all expenses.

The last Euchre Party of the season will be held in the A.O.U.W. hall on Tuesday night next, March 31st.

Hospital Notes

The Daughters of the Empire gratefully acknowledge the receipt of a donation of $50 from Mr. James Curry, of Toronto, toward the maintenance of the James Curry ward. The ladies feel deeply indebted to Mr. Curry for his generosity and continued interest in the welfare of the Hospital.

Donations of clean cotton and linen are needed and will be thankfully received.

WEALTH OF HAIR

Beautiful hair, thick, soft, fluffy, lustrous, and free from dandruff, is one of woman's greatest charms, yet so many have streaked, thin and lifeless hair and think there is no remedy. Pretty hair is largely a matter of care.

Frequent applications of Parisian Sage well rubbed into the scalp is all that is needed—it acts like magic. Try it to-night—you will really be surprised with the result. Not only will the hair become soft, fluffy, radiant with life and really doubly beautiful, but all dandruff disappears, falling hair and itching scalp cease—your head feels fine.

All druggists sell a large bottle of Parisian Sage for fifty cents. Get it from F. S. Pickering, he will refund the money if you are not satisfied.

—Mr. Geo. E. Brown, of this town, has sold the w½ lot 19, con. 4, west, Caledon, a 100 acre property, to Mr. Wm. B. Houston. The price was around $2,000.

SPRING MILLINERY

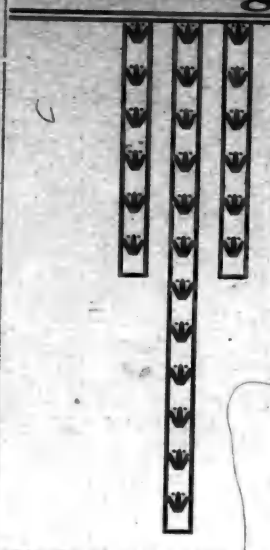
Orangeville Houses Held Their Annual Openings Last Wednesday.

Distinctive Features of This Season's Styles

Who could possibly want to be a man, when the time for spring bonnets comes around? Imagine having to choose a plain, hard, ugly, dingy felt hat instead of one of the lovely creations in some beautiful rainbow color with adorable little bunches of roses and the quaintest wee garlands of tiny forget-me-nots, making you happy in spite of yourself.

"Do you know one of the best cures for the blues?" a lady friend asked. Upon receiving a negative reply in a tone which implied that curiosity had been aroused, she exclaimed with enthusiasm, "Drop your housework. Ring up a friend. Don your coat and hat and go down Broadway and look at the new hats. It is an inspiration like wandering through a lovely garden and you return home refreshed, bubbling over with high spirits and new ideas."

Be this as it may Easter is approaching with great strides and shortly now the ladies will have to settle the question of their spring headwear. Many of them made their initial attempt to solve the problem of what to wear last Wednesday afternoon, when local millinery houses held their annual spring openings. The weather was not any too propitious, but this did not prevent the ladies from turning out in large numbers. The milliners and their assistants had made the usual elaborate preparations for opening day, and the displays made in the different establishments were exceedingly attractive.



HILL & CO.

Miss White, of Dalston, who comes to Hill & Co. this season with a successful record in millinery establishments elsewhere, states that one of the striking features of the new spring headwear for 1914 is the irregularity in the brim of the hats and the lack of symmetry in the widths of its sides. Another feature that forms a welcome change, after being absent for a number of seasons, is the amount of milliners' work that is expended upon both the hat foundation and the trimming arrangement. Many of the hats are based upon dainty and elaborate French models of the Louis XV. and XVI. and the First Empire periods. These styles have brought with them a noticeable revival of the use of flowers and trimming materials. The new flower effects can only be described as lovely and their rich and pleasing color harmonies have only to be seen to be admired. As in every other season comparatively few of the flower effects are complete without the rose. Corded silk and moire ribbons in three toned shades are especially popular for trimming material. One of the daintiest hats shown here was a pretty French shape with the brim rolled high at the back. It was faced with shadow lace and trimmed with brocaded satin ribbon, caught across the front with French flowers. Another triumph of the milliners' art was a shadow lace tam with flare side at the left and lower band of blue. The mount was an ostrich feather and it was finished with a combination of blue flowers and terra cotta shaded ribbon. A small Russian sailor made a strong appeal to the innate love for the beautiful. It was mounted with a white osprey placed at the back and trimmed with strappings of black velvet ribbon, finished off with silk rosebuds. Miss White and her assistants had the showrooms prettily decorated for the openings. The mirrors were draped with silks and ribbons in the popular Roman stripes caught up with clusters of flowers, giving a very attractive effect, which was further heightened by an ingenious arrangement of palms.

MARSHALL GREEN & CO.

Miss Buchanan, of Toronto, a milliner with a wide experience, who is in charge of Marshall Green & Co's. department this spring, had a very pretty display of the new spring styles in ladies, Misses and children's hats. Here, as elsewhere, pagan and marine blues, the tango shade, tuscans and browns were dominant among the colourings. Miss Buchanan informed our reporter that black and white are also very popular and will be prominent in the new spring headwear. The most conspicuous of the shapes shown here was a dainty French hat, small, narrow and extremely high at the left side. Small close fitting fancy turbans were also much in evidence and are going to be greatly worn by smart dressers. In trimmings and trimming material one could not fail to observe that fancy Roman stripes in silks and ribbons, jets and sequins and small flowers such as rosebuds and dainty bunches of forget-me-nots were very much in evidence. Small fruits, such as cherries, are also being used a great deal and serve to produce some very pleasing effects. One of the pretty hats shown by Miss Buchanan was made of black tagel straw, extremely high on the left side and trimmed with a large bunch of white osprey. It was finished with a jet buckle and a piping of black satin around the crown. A made hat of white tape was deservedly admired by the majority of visitors. It was one of the new French shapes, medium sized, with a soft crown of fancy silk trimmed with lace and having a large bunch of pink chrysanthemums on the left side. Interest also centred in a simple hat of net in one of the prevailing blue shades. A round turban in shape, it was made of tagel braid with a soft crown of maline and silk and a high front mount of maline braid. Miss Buchanan is showing some very attractive lines of misses' and children's hats.

W. E. ROGERS.

Miss Beatrice Reid, an Orangeville girl, with an established reputation as a successful milliner, is again in charge of the millinery department in W. E. Rogers. The display on opening day was very attractive and was the subject of general favorable comment. Small hats, according to Miss Reid, are to be very much in vogue for early spring wear. Black is still one of the most popular of the fashionable colors. Draped crowns of moire, crepe and shadow lace are shown considerably and have a very soft and pretty effect. Among the newer shades are mahogany, apple green, melangee, sweet pea and copper tints. Fancy ribbons are very much used, moire, Roman stripes and tapestry being among the newer effects. Jet is an exceedingly popular feature this season and is used in almost every conceivable way. The flowers are very small and arranged to produce a quaint and altogether charming effect. Fruit and pompoms are also popular and will be seen on many of the best hats. Among the smart hats that were greatly admired at the opening was a stylish black creation made of very fine milan straw, with the brim turned abruptly and high on the side and toward the back. It was trimmed with a huge white osprey and a jet bandeau across the front. Another favorite was a very pretty shape of cadet blue with a deep brim and trimmed with a black pompom finished with jet. Still another was a three cornered hat in black edged with small red rosebuds. From these few comments our readers may be able to gather some idea of the excellence of the showing, which Miss Reid and her staff are making this season.

RITCHIE BROS.

Miss Brooks, who has an established place in the good opinion of the ladies of Orangeville and district, is once more in charge at Ritchie Bros. To The Banner, this young lady stated that the universal tilt is one of the noticeable features of this year's styles. There is scarcely a hat that sits level on the head. They are slanted at an angle in such a way that, though fairly high on the head, they shade the right eye. Always, one may see at least one side of a lovely, waved coiffure, indescribably "chic," with an old world quaintness. A pompom at the sharp upflare of a brim, two aigrettes set at contrasting angles, a high shaped bandeau massed with tiny flowers supporting a slanted plaque, the suddenness of a straight-up mount on a close turban—these are telling points in the spring chapeau. On the whole, shapes are small and strange, colors are eccentric, but with the eccentricity of downright genius. The range of colors in all models includes all the new shades—citron, rush green, mahogany, madonna blue, brown, plum, tango and a dozen others. The Billy Burke is a jaunty style, which is exceptionally becoming when set at a proper angle. The French sailor is another of the smartest things, with narrow sailor brim, tilting it up on the left side. The one shown us was faced and piped with madonna blue moire ribbons, while the crown was garlanded with tiny pink roses. Misses hats, designed for girls from 15 to 20 years, and smart sailor shapes abound. The little poke bonnet effect, trimmed with narrow band of black velvet ribbon caught around the crown and ending in streamers, was shown for little girls of six years. From beginning to end the display in this place was most interesting.

McLaughlin Motor Cars

In considering the purchase of a motor car it is most essential that you consider the motor installed in your car. A most important feature is to satisfy yourself on its fuel economy, ability to get the most miles out of a gallon of gasoline, and smooth and silent running at all times.

Intensely significant, therefore, is the over-head-valve motor, the big feature of McLaughlin-Buick construction. It is an engine that is trustworthy and reliable, and will save you from 15 to 20 per cent. in operating cost.

No other motor ever built has attained the same high standard of durability and consistency the McLaughlin-Buick over-head-valve engine has made an every day occurrence.

After many severe and prolonged road tests which we have put this motor through, we are satisfied that our guarantee to give more power and mileage than any other engine of similar dimensions made anywhere else in the world, is not overdone.

In competition with many of America's best known automobiles, to determine the amount of fuel consumed while travelling under most versatile conditions, the superiority of the over-head-valve motor has been proven times innumerable.

AFTER THE RADIAL

Grey County Farmers are Becoming Greatly Interested

That the farmers of Euphrasia, Holland and Sydenham intend making a desperate effort to have the new radial run through their section of the county is shown by the fact that on Tuesday a delegation of a dozen of the most prominent residents of the vicinity of Bognor, Walters Falls and Rocklyn met Hon. Adam Beck, at Toronto, for the purpose of placing the advantages of a route through those places for the hydro radial which is proposed. This comes as the result of several meetings held at these points during the course of the past week. It indicates the interest country districts are taking in the radial proposition. Rocklyn set the ball rolling when a number of the people of the vicinity got together and appointed six men to act as a deputation to see Beck and place before him some of the reasons why the radial should go through that part of the county. This was followed by a meeting on Thursday night at Walter's Falls, a meeting of two hundred of the most progressive farmers of the vicinity and which were addressed by Mayor John McQuaker, of Owen Sound. Mayor McQuaker went into the history of the radial movement and the different steps leading up to it, and paid tribute to the energy and the progressiveness of Hon. Adam Beck, who stood sponsor for the scheme. He told in detail the requirements before a radial could be built. He did not pretend to say what route would be followed by an Owen Sound-Guelph radial line, but held out the assurance that the peculiar situation and the lack of shipping facilities for that section of the country would be a factor in the decision the commission would arrive at. When the meeting was over the following were appointed a delegation to accompany the Rocklyn deputation on Tuesday to Toronto:—Messrs. James Adams, Sam Marshall, Frank Olmstead and Fred Wickham. The Rocklyn men had in the meantime got in touch by phone with Hon. F. B. Lucas and he had made the appointment for them with Hon. Adam Beck, the hour being two o'clock. Then on Saturday night another meeting was held at Bognor, a number from there having been present at the Walters Falls meeting, and there having made arrangements with Mayor McQuaker to go to Bognor on Saturday night to address the yeomanry. Again Mayor McQuaker outlined the growth of the hydro movement and the inception of the Guelph to the lake idea. After the meeting, which was attended by about fifty, a delegation was appointed to accompany that from Rocklyn and Walters Falls to Toronto, the interests of the three communities being almost identical with regard to radials. The meeting at Walters Falls was attended by about two hundred. This will be sufficient indication of the manner in which the radial fever has become epidemic throughout that portion of Holland, Sydenham and Euphrasia. When the people get behind a movement in sufficient numbers something is bound to happen. The farmers are beginning to display the proper spirit, and in their enthusiasm the hope or the success of the great scheme lies.—Markdale Standard.

"I.VE TED" POTATOES.

Antoine Parmentier Broke Down France's Objection to Tubers.

The centenary of the death of Antoine Parmentier, who popularised the potato in France, was celebrated at Neuilly, where his statue stands. Thanks to Sir Walter Raleigh, writes the Paris correspondent of The London Times, Englishmen became acquainted with the potato as soon as any nation in Europe. But in France, ever since its first introduction from Peru, it was the object of strange prejudices. It was supposed to cause fever and weakness, and was made responsible for any illness which attacked the first bold spirits who experimented with it in cookery; it was even believed to produce leprosy. To Parmentier's scientific exposition of its nutritive value and his campaign in its favor is due the final dissipation of these scruples and the spread of its cultivation on a large scale.

Parmentier was born in 1755, at Montdidier, in Normandy. His father died soon after his birth, and left his widowed mother with small means on which to educate her three children. Antoine, the eldest, became apprenticed to an apothecary at the age of 18. A year later the Seven Years' war broke out, and he obtained a post on the medical staff of the French army operating in Hanover. He took advantage of his being in Germany to continue his study of medicine at Frankfurt under the famous physician Meyer. It was there that he became acquainted with the nutritive properties of the potato, which had been well known in Germany for some time. At the end of the war he returned to Paris and was made apothecary at the Invalides. In consequence of the great famine of 1769 the Academy of Bescancon offered a prize for a treatise on vegetables which could be substituted for bread in event of the failure of the corn crop. Parmentier won the prize with an essay showing how the necessary nourishment for the human body could be obtained from the starch of certain plants.

Potatoes were then cultivated at no considerable extent in France except in Anjou and in the Limousin, where they had been introduced by Turgot. In 1778 Parmentier published an "Examen chimique de la Pomme-deterre" in which he showed that all the popular prejudices against potatoes were unfounded, and obtained from the Government 80 acres of waste land to the north of the Bois de Boulogne on which to make experiments. In spite of the ridicule of the people of Paris, who regarded him as a crank, he sowed his acres and watched for the result. When in due time the flowers appeared Parmentier picked a bunch of them and offered it to the king. Louis XVI. at once placed it in his button-hole, and the success of the potato was assured. Its triumph was sealed by the genius of the royal chef, who invented pomme soufflee, surely the most dainty and palatable form in which the vegetable can be served. The court was delighted, and Parmentier was acclaimed as the "inventer of the potato."

Nurse's Years of Experience

Proves Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Best Treatment for Kidney and Stomach Troubles.

The trained nurse has even greater opportunities than the doctor himself to watch the action of medicine in specific cases.

For years the writer of this letter has been recommending the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills among her patients, and is firmly convinced that no treatment is so prompt and effective.

This is the most valuable evidence obtainable, and we believe that all who know Mrs. Duffy will appreciate it to the full, knowing that she would not recommend anything in which she had not the fullest confidence.

Mrs. Duffy, nurse, 35 Lewis street, Toronto, writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for years, and recommend them to my patients for all disorders of the kidneys, liver and stomach. In all my professional experience I have found nothing better." Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

At its last meeting Shelburne Council passed the following resolution:—"That the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario be requested on behalf of the Municipal Council of the Town of Shelburne to inquire into, examine, investigate, and report upon, the cost of constructing and operating an Electric Railway from Guelph and Fergus through Grand Valley, and by way of Jessopville to Shelburne, and north to Horning's Mills, Redickville, Maple Valley and Singhampton to Collingwood; the municipalities which will be served by such Railway; the population of each of such municipalities as shown by the last enumeration thereof by the Assessors; an estimate of the probable revenue of such Railway, and the practicability of the undertaking, and its value to the localities to be served by it, as provided for in Section 3 of the Hydro-Electric Railway Act."

POLICE COURT TO GRIND.

After a long period of inactivity the mills of justice are being oiled up, and a grist will likely be run through on Saturday. For some time there has been a suspicion that the License Act did not receive the consideration it deserved, and that liquor was being sold after hours. Also it was evident that some of Inspector Robinson's "Indians" were quenching their thirst with something stronger than local option beverages, or good aqua pura. A little disturbance down at the Commercial a fortnight ago brought things to a crisis. After an investigation by Inspector Robinson he laid two charges against the house for selling after hours. A Mr. Montgomery, who figured in the disturbance at the Commercial hotel stables a couple of months ago, an interdicted person, will also have to show where he got the stimulant that affected his locomotion the other day. The cases were set down for last Monday, but were adjourned until Saturday because counsel could not be present.—Star & Vidette.

The Reason Fewer People Take "Salts"

We find the use of salts and other harsh physics is becoming less every year because more and more people are using Rexall Orderlies, which are and they firmly believe to be the best bowel remedy ever made. They taste so much like candy that even the children like them. At the same time they act so easily and naturally that there is no purging, griping or pain. They promptly remove the constipation and, by soothing and strengthening the bowels, make it less liable to occur again. We have the utmost faith in them. We know what they are made of and the pleasant, beneficial results that always follow their use.

You needn't take our word for it. If Rexall Orderlies don't help you—if they don't entirely relieve all your bowel troubles—come back and tell us and we'll give back your money. In vest pocket tin boxes; 10c, 25c, 50c.

Eggs Scalloped With Meat.

Take three eggs, three tablespoonfuls bread or cracker crumbs, one-half teaspoonful of mixed mustard, one tablespoonful butter, two of hot milk, salt and paprika. Put about three tablespoonfuls of this dry mixture aside and mix the remainder with half the butter, the mustard and enough milk to form a thick paste. Butter individual dishes, one for each egg, and fill with the paste, leaving a hollow in the centre for the egg. Carefully break on egg into each of these hollows and shake over the top of each egg some of the dry mixture laid aside. Put bits of butter on top of each and bake.

Their First Meeting.

"I am very glad to meet you again, Miss Dowsley," he said when they had been introduced to each other.

"Again?" she replied. "Why, have we met before?"

"Well, perhaps we haven't exactly met before, but you tickled my chin with your feather for about an hour one evening in an elevated car."

Wifely Curiosity.

"Henry, dear, I tried on a suit of your clothes the other day, and it fitted me to perfection."

"May I ask your object in taking such a liberty with my garments?"

"Why, Belle Greene said she heard Tommy Tolliver say that you wasn't much bigger than a shrimp, and I was just wondering how big a shrimp is."

Good Advice.

Never forget the advice of Themistocles. Said that ancient, "I would bestow my daughter upon a man without money, but not upon money without a man." Just change money for title and see the different reading: "I would bestowed my daughter upon a man without title, but not upon title without a man."

NO MORE PAIN

"KEPHALDOL" CAN NOW BE HAD AT YOUR DRUGGIST'S

Herr Doctor Stohr, the famous Austrian nerve specialist, first used KEPHALDOL prescription in his private practice and hospital work, in Vienna. Other noted physicians and surgeons adopted this formula in treating severe cases of Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago, La Grippe and Colds, Neuralgia and Headaches. The wonderful properties of KEPHALDOL became known in England, where a company was formed to prepare KEPHALDOL TABLETS and supply them to the public at a nominal price.

Canadians, visiting the Old Country, heard of KEPHALDOL—tried them—and brought them back to Canada. So great became the demand for KEPHALDOL here, that a Canadian office was established to distribute these tablets on this side of the ocean.

So, what one famous physician did in Austria, has resulted in thousands and thousands of sufferers being cured of pain.

If your druggist should not have KEPHALDOL, a 50c tube of tablets may be obtained by remitting the price to Kephaldol Limited, 31 Latour Street, Montreal.

THE BANNER

THE BANNER, APRIL 2nd, 1914.

WILL BE DISBANDED.

Present Rural Regiment to Leave and a New City 36th to be Formed.

Tuesday's dailies predict the disbanding of the 36th Peel Regiment at an early date. They state that the Regiment will be divided between the 20th, which has headquarters at Milton, and a new regiment to be known as the 36th, with headquarters near the corner of Keele and Dundas streets, Toronto. The new Toronto regiment will consist of eight companies of infantry.

As the 20th Regiment has been practically out of existence for a number of years and the 35th troop needed recruits, and because seventy-five per cent. of the officers of the old Peel regiment live in Toronto, it was considered advisable to make this change. The matter has been before Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, and he has expressed his approval.

The change will not take place at once. It is the intention of the Minister of Militia to have this regiment go to camp at Niagara as the old Peel regiment in June, and after that the plans will materialize. The new regiment will be a camp-going regiment, and will have for its recruiting grounds West Toronto, with Bathurst street as its eastern boundary.

The officers of the regiment will not be appointed till after the camp this summer, but the following names have been mentioned for command: Lieut.-Col. in command, Lt.-Col. R. C. Windeyer (tenure for one year); Major, second in command, W. H. Hedges; Major, F. J. Hamilton; Captain, W. J. Kempthorne; Adjutant, Capt. A. J. McCausland; Paymaster, Major O. Heron. The remaining vacancies will be filled by selected company officers of the present regiment now resident in Toronto.

The officers of the new regiment have secured temporary quarters for their soldiers in a foundry building near Keele and Dundas streets, which has been fitted up and is in good condition. They intend to build permanent armories of their own.

Major W. H. Hedges, Capt. A. J. McCausland, Major O. Heron, and Capt. Kempthorne are all ex-Queen's Own men, and Col Windeyer has commanded the old Peel regiment for the past five years. Major F. J. Hamilton is at present seconded for duty as Brigade Major of the 14th.

Succession Duties.

Last year the County of Peel contributed $5,178.59 to the revenue of the province in succession duties. The amount was made up from the following estates:—John Codlin, $1,046.63; Thos. Cranston, $1,846.20; Robert Kerr, $1,692.85; John A. McLaren, $24.00; Wm. J. Wright, $558.91.

Sewing Class.

The Women's Institute Sewing Class, which commenced in the Old Council Chamber yesterday afternoon, will be continued on Saturday, April 4th, at 2 p.m. and on each Wednesday and Saturday following at 2 p.m. for the next five weeks. Lessons last three hours or more. Come and receive instruction in dressmaking. The teacher is Miss Collins, sent out under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture for Institute Demonstration work. Ladies are invited to bring along their blouses or the dresses they are thinking of making.

Appeal Dismissed.

The following item appeared in the legal column in Tuesday's dailies: White v. Anderson — C. R. McKeown, K.C., for plaintiff. J. L. Island (Orangeville), for defendant. Appeal by plaintiff from judgment of Fisher, J., of County Dufferin of December 30, 1913. Action for $50 damages for trespass on lands of plaintiff and $10 for pasture for years 1911 and 1912 and for an injunction to restrain future trespass. HYDRO-ELECTRIC RAILWAY.

G. B. Ryan, of Guelph, Addressed Large Audience in Opera House on Monday Night.

Speaker Points Out Advantages of Government Owned Electric Roads.

About 300 people attended the meeting held in the Opera House on Monday night for the purpose of discussing the proposed hydro-electric railway from Guelph to Orangeville. The attendance was larger than expected in view of the murky, unpleasant night and the short notice of the meeting and showed that the project has created a lively interest throughout the district. One of the significant features of the gathering was the number of farmers who were present. Some of these had driven several miles over the bad roads. Councillor Cannawin headed a delegation from West Caledon, including Wm. Walwin, D. Conley, Jas. Hilliard and several others. Ex-reeve Thos. Goodeve, of Adjala, drove in from Hockley, a distance of ten miles. Chas. Overland, reeve of Erin village, occupied a seat on the platform. Probably two-score farmers who live near the town were scattered through the audience.

Mayor Island presided and the chief speaker of the evening was Mr. G. B. Ryan, one of Guelph's leading business men and a prominent figure in the movement for Government owned hydro-electric railways. Mr. Ryan, it is of interest to note, started in business in Orangeville when a young man some 39 years ago. As he told his audience on Monday night his capital at that time consisted of a $5 and four $1 bills. After building up a successful business here, he went to Owen Sound and from there to Guelph, where he has a large general store. The firm also has a large store in Owen Sound.

In his address Monday night, Mr. Ryan, who is a forceful speaker, with a rich vein of infectious humor that he uses to good purpose, impressed his audience with the need for live progressive and public spirited men if a town or city was to thrive. While Orangeville had a population of 2500 he would venture the assertion that there were not more than 25 "live wires" in the place. The trouble with the majority of men was that they acted as if they were born to be "brakemen" and as if it was their duty to "brake" every train of progress and opportunity that attempted to enter a place. That class of men, asserted the speaker with emphasis, "are a darned nuisance wherever you find them." Mr. Ryan told his audience that he would rather take chances in a poorly situated town with good, live, progressive men, than in a favorably located place that was run by drones. It was the men who made the place every time. What a town or city needed more than anything else was big men—men who were big in honesty, big in faith, big in brains and big in thought. Communities as a rule were not short of big problems, but of big men to tackle their problems. The speaker expressed great faith in the ability of men to do things. If the men of the town would generate the power that was in them they could make old Orangeville hum. The town was favorably situated and had important natural and geographical advantages. Given men of energy, enterprise and public spirit there was no reason why it should not go ahead.

This, the speaker pointed out, was an age of electric power. A great opportunity was lying at the front door of Orangeville and other municipalities in the form of hydro-electric power. Orangeville, Mr. Ryan believed, would become a city, and quite a large city, if its citizens took advantage of the opportunities that hydro-electric power offered. This had been the experience of many places on the other side of the line and there was no reason why history should not repeat itself here. There had to be a certain amount of speculation and enterprise in a man if he was to amount to anything large. The same statement was just as applicable to a town or city.

The Ontario Government, through Hon. Adam Beck, had made good in the matter of hydro-electric power. Experience had in every instance verified the estimates of the Provincial Commissioner's engineers. In 1906 Guelph for instance committed itself to an expenditure of $350,000 for Kitrick the purpose of bringing electric power from Niagara. The city contracted for 2500 h.p., which it was told would cost $24 per horse power. As a matter of fact the city was only asked and the price had since been reduced to $21. Electric light bills had been practically cut in two in the Royal city. The saving to Guelph last year was estimated at $14,000, apart altogether from the saving to manufacturers who used hydro-electric power.

Having made good the promises of the Government in the matter of hydro-electric power, the Commission was now planning to build and operate hydro-electric railways. An Act had already been passed empowering the Commission to make surveys and report on the practicability, probable cost, maintenance, operation and probable revenue of any line. Municipalities have simply to ask for in order to obtain this information. If the report is unfavorable the Commission will bear the cost of the survey. On the other hand if the road is found practicable and the Commission decides to build, then the cost of the survey will be added to the capital cost of the road. The Commission, Mr. Ryan explained, would build and operate the road and would become bankers for the people in the matter of financing the project. This would be done by issuing bonds for the total cost of the road. The municipalities interested would be asked to issue debentures equalling the amount of the bonds as additional security. Backed by the guarantee of the Ontario Government and with the additional security furnished by the municipalities the bonds should be gilt-edged and would doubtless sell for the highest market price. All the road would be expected to earn would be sufficient to pay for maintenance and running expenses, to pay interest on the bonds and create a sinking fund to retire them at maturity. The only risk the municipalities would run would be in the event of the failure of the road to pay. In that case the debentures would necessarily be called upon to make up the deficiency. This was after all a risk of no moment, because the road would not be built unless the estimates showed that it would pay and these were certain to be within the mark, because the Government's reputation depended upon its ability to fulfil its promises. The cost of construction and equipment Mr. Ryan estimated at $42,000 a mile. The proposition was a big one, but it meant much to the future prosperity of Ontario. It would turn villages into towns, towns into cities and cities into larger cities. It was not a promoters' scheme—not a scheme to make millions for a private corporation, but a project to give the people of Ontario the boon of electric railways at the lowest possible cost. The farmers of this province had the land and they had the energy, but they were handicapped for want of adequate shipping facilities. With electric railways, instead of one or two trains a day there would be cars every hour or so and these would pick up farm produce and other freight anywhere along the road. Hydro-radials would also bring the farmers electric energy for lighting and power purposes. Farmers living on either side of one of these roads would be able to take power for a distance of ten or fifteen miles. Mr. Ryan expressed his conviction that hydro-radials would be one of the greatest material blessings that had ever come to Ontario. The question was what were the people going to do about it? Would they grasp the opportunity that was at their door. The electric railway was the automobile of the poor man—less the punctures, the gasoline and the blow-outs. It would completely transform life for the people in the country.

This, concluded Mr. Ryan in an eloquent peroration, was the century of opportunity for Canada. The eyes of the world were upon this country. Yet with its vast territory and almost illimitable resources Canada had only 8,000,000 people. This country was only in its short clothes as a nation and the Canadian people had only wet the soles of their feet in the great sea of prosperity.

Mr. Ryan was greeted with prolonged and ringing applause upon resuming his seat at the close of his eloquent and masterly address. As soon as the applause subsided Mr. D. B. Brown and Mr. R. B. Henry submitted a resolution endorsing the hydro-railway project and asking the Town Council to take steps at its next meeting to petition the Hydro-Electric Commission to make a survey and furnish an estimate of the cost of the Guelph to Orangeville road. This was carried unanimously. Mr. A. E. Annis and Dr. Campbell then proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Ryan, which was carried with great heartiness.

At a meeting held immediately after the general meeting, a Branch of the Provincial Hydro-Electric Railway Union was organized with the following officers:—

Chairman—D. B. Brown
Vice-Chairman—Dr. G. H. Campbell
Secretary-Treasurer—A. E. Annis.
Committee—Mayor Island, J. A. Whaley, J. J. White and A. D. McKitrick.

FICTITIOUS NAMES.

Inspector Orr Seized Eight Cases and Magistrate Crawford, of Brampton, Hears Interesting Evidence.

For some time past large quantities of liquor have been shipped to the station at Melville Junction, where it has been called for by different persons who bear orders purporting to be signed by nearby residents. So numerous were the cases of Imperial whiskey deposited there daily that Inspector Orr authorized County Constable Alexander to seize a quantity on March 10th. Mr. Alexander went to Melville Junction and secured a number of cases addressed to J. A. Raymond, A. Cole, R. Houston, G. H. Lewis, F. C. Hewitt, H. Smith, L. L. Hassard and others. None of these people were known in the neighborhood and all are supposed to be fictitious names. The constable and the station agent at Melville Junction gave their evidence before Police Magistrate Crawford on Tuesday, nearly all day being occupied in the various cases. Constable Alexander swore that he had made a seizure and the station agent produced his book showing that large quantities were received at that point daily and were called for. He did not produce the orders, but stated that a man named Densmore had called for a large number of cases from time to time, and another man who gave his name as Lewis had also taken away large quantities, after giving the agent the orders signed by the above names and others. The agent admitted that he thought all the orders were signed by the same person, than he did not know any of the persons referred to with the exception of Densmore, who is a spare brakeman or conductor on the C.P.R. residing at Orangeville. The cases were always carried away in a rig and presumably to Orangeville. Since March 10th, when the seizure was made, no liquor has been shipped to Melville Junction. An adjournment of one week was asked for by Mr. Justin in order to ascertain, if possible, who orders the liquor, all of which is shipped from Berlin, and to find out who carries on the illicit trade in the northern part of Caledon Township, which is under local option.—Brampton Conservator.

HIDES WANTED

I am prepared to pay the following prices for Hides:—

No. 1 Beef Hides, 12c and 13c per lb, $4.00 to $4.50.
No. 1 Horse Hides, mane and tail on, 75c to $1.50.
No. 1 Calfskins, according to size, to $1.35.
Sheep Skins, present take of, $1.00
Clean Horsehair, 35c to 40c a lb.
Cake Tallow, 6½c a lb.

Farmers will be able to realize better prices for their hides by carefully observing the following method:—

1. Stick the throat lengthwise.
2. Cut from base to left horn, in direct line by left eye to nose; then across between the horns and skin the face.
3. Cut from sticking place to under lip and skin the cheeks. Cut into the spine just back of the horns and sever the spine; then cut hide around the base of horns and sever the head.
4. Cut from the throat along the centre of the belly to base of tail.
5. Take off dew-claws; then split up inside of leg to knee. Cut through the knee joint; then strip back forelegs, taking off the foot. Hind legs should be treated in the same manner.
6. Split from hock to belly on all four legs.
7. Then skin both sides of belly and carefully sever the tail-bone, and start the hide at base of tail and remove by pulling and use of knife, as carefully as possible.
8. Spread hide out flat and cover with salt thoroughly.

This is the method followed in the great slaughter or packing houses of Chicago and also in all the leading slaughter houses east, west and south of Chicago. The value and popularity of hides that are taken off in this way is not only due to the excellent manner of flaying, but to the absence of cuts and jagged, useless pieces that are usually found on country hides.

LAUREL.

To the Man Who Thinks of Joining—

If you wish to undergo a "ripsnorting" old degree
Just ask the boys to give you the one called number three,
Though you've joined other lodges,
And are up to some new dodges,
You'll find a new sensation in the G.O.R.A.B.

We suggest that you wear a heavy coat of mail,
Something that won't tear if it catches on a nail,
Get a bulky leather hod
And wrap it round your head
For number three appears to be like riding on a rail.

If you should [illegible] to get away,
You'd have to be some sprinter
For some of the members so they say are tall as an Orangeville printer.
Judging past from what I've read,
You'd be safer [illegible] in bed,
And if you decided to go I'd like to know who'd run the rink next winter.

THE WILD BEE.

Owing to the bad state of the roads Rev. J. R. Bell was unable to take his service at Coombe on Sunday.

Mrs. Marshall Curry had charge of the Topic [illegible] Presbyterian prayer meeting on Wednesday evening and handled the [illegible] in a very able manner.

Mrs. [illegible] of Ottawa, is visiting her [illegible] Manse.

Laurel [illegible] ing alpace. With a teacher who [illegible] up agriculture in the classes [illegible] rotate school gardens and [illegible] playground, we are among [illegible] rural schools.

Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] Cooney and family [illegible] to their new residence [illegible] of Orange St.

The Rev. [illegible] of the Methodist Church was addressed by Mr. [illegible] School Inspector, of Orangeville, being "Irish Night." Mr. [illegible] gave a most interesting [illegible] on St. Patrick and [illegible] curiosities of Irish-[illegible] interspersed with many [illegible].

We were [illegible] to have our Epworth League [illegible] President, Mr. Braden [illegible]ville, at our League [illegible] pleased with his delightful [illegible] "Humble Bee." We are [illegible] most and justly our sister [illegible] another burg of no. Why [illegible] many Bees doing business [illegible] weather?

The [illegible] of the G.O.R.A. Bees [illegible] watch for the Bumble Bee [illegible] are active again, the poor [illegible] lent for a while. The night [illegible] dark, oh fearfully dark.

The [illegible] never came out to play.

But the G.O.R.A.B. met at eight Rob and [illegible] to initiate. Rob took [illegible] looks like a duck to Oscar didn't, but said 'be oughter.'

Mr. M. Bennington has a slight cold owing to getting wet while crossing the spring freshet, when going to the G.O.R.A.B. last Thursday evening. Matt. knew the water was across the road ,but the lure was too strong to resist. Last reports say he is on the high road to recovery.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Ranton were the guests of friends in this vicinity for a few days last week. We are glad to know that Mr. Ranton's business is prospering in Palmerston.

Mr. George Young removed to his farm last week, and his late residence is now owned and occupied by Mr. E. B. Cooney.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Nelson spent Sunday with friends in Shelburne.

We have had very interesting articles from Bumble Bee, Queen Bee, The Tame Bee, but never a word from the G.O.R.A.Bee,. By the way, we understand that there was a meeting of that cult last Thursday evening, when the usual business was transacted, and refreshments were served.

Laurel is indeed advancing. We understand that a Lawn Bowling Club has been formed, and that they expect to have a green ready for bowling by midsummer. This is an undertaking worthy of the support of every man in the vicinity.

The local hockeyites journeyed to Grand Valley for an exhibition game last week, and for the first half made the natives of that hamlet somewhat nervous lest their team should receive their first defeat at home at the hands of a small town aggregation ; but the pace was too fast to be kept up and in the second half the Wanderers scored at will making the final score 7 to 2. Our boys are not well versed in the underhand part of the game as some of their opponents. It is a significant fact that every Grand Valley player except the goal keeper was penalized, while not one of the Laurel team merited this honor (?)

Which I wish to remark
And my language is plain
That for ways that are dark
And for tricks that are vain
The heathen Chinee is peculiar.

Now the heathen Chinee
Poor unfortunate man
Can no longer see
Himself nor his clan
Awarded the prize as a trickster.

There's a team in a town
Not too far away
Can beat him "hands down"
In a game that they play
And to think of their calling it Hockey.

They said 'twas buried out of sight,
The G. O. R. A. B.
But from reports of Thursday night
It doesn't seem to be.

A candidate would be on hand
To take the third degree
They passed the word amongst the band
There'd be a jamboree.

The Edgar 'Phone was utilized
Calling members from afar ;
Oft rural phones have been despised
But what blessed things they are.

You may hear some friend out yonder
Calling up his Uncle Mike,
Do you ever sit and ponder
What the conversation's like.

Or do you stand and listen
Knowing well that they can't see
While your optics fairly glisten
With a most unholy glee.

When some secret you discover
Like the doings of Thursday night,
Thinking, "Won't I turn that over,
Adding to it just a mite?"

Those meetings really do no harm
But entertainment lend,
So why should they cause such alarm
To those who don't attend ?

So G. O. R. A. B.
Here's to you one and all,
Your good points I am bound to see,
Your bad ones—Well they're small.
Reflections of a TAME BEE.

ROSEMONT.

The spring weather has reached us at last and our farmers are now preparing their seed.

Most of our farmers have cut their yearly supply of wood.

Rev. G. L. Gray took the funeral services of Mr. Robert Barber, of Violet Hill, on Saturday.

Only a couple more weeks until Easter and then the eggs will catch it.

Some from our village took in the wood bee and party at Mr. Herb. Penelton's at Sheldon on Friday last and report a good time.

Mr. Claude Robinson expects to leave for the West this week.

Many of the members of L.O.L. No. 9 think that if war breaks out in Ulster they will take a moonlight trip out some night.

Mr. John Murphy is selling off his store goods and intends giving up business.

Mr. Alex. McDonald sold a barn off his Tossorontio farm to Mr. Laddie Graham, of Mulmur, last week.

Mr. Wm. Irwin lost a valuable colt from lockjaw last week.

Dr. Ed. Hanna is kept busy day and night. Ed. is entitled to great praise for the success he is having.

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. McNabb were in Toronto last week attending the funeral of the latter's brother-in-law, Mr. Ingham.

It is our sad duty to record the death of one of our respected citizens in the person of Mrs. Jane Moore, who passed away on Friday evening at the advanced age of 91 years after a few days illness. Service was conducted in the Presbyterian Church on Monday by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Grahame, assisted by Rev. Mr. Dudgeon and Rev. Mr. Gray. After the service the remains were taken to Alliston cemetery for burial. Mr. Moore's husband died about 60 years ago. Seven sons and two daughters are left to mourn her loss. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved family in their hour of trial.

CALEDON.

The Caledon Branch of the County of Peel Women's Institute will hold its regular monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. W. J. Brown on Saturday, April 4th. Meeting at 2.30 sharp. Everybody welcome.

MONO MILLS.

Haffey Bros., who have already acquired quite a reputation as owners and breeders of good horses, have recently purchased the imported Clydesdale stallion, "Baron's Fancy," from Graham Bros., of Claremont.

Considerable interest is being taken here in the United Farmers organizations of Ontario. Messrs. John Moon and J. G. Hassard, who attended the recent Convention in Toronto as delegates from the local Institute Club, have submitted interesting reports and it is the intention of the Club to take a share in the stock of the Company and become one of the working units, gathered together in this Association.

Mr. W. J. H. Tisdale, representative of the Department of Agriculture in Peel County, will put on a Demonstration in Mr. Thos. McCandless' orchard on Friday afternoon, April 3rd, under the auspices of the Farmers' Institute Club. The Demonstration will include both Pruning and Spraying and should be very interesting and helpful to all those who have fruit trees. Everyone is cordially invited to be present.

Mr. Robert McCutcheon, for many years a resident of Mono, died at his home near Alton on Friday last. The funeral, which was largely attended, was held from his former residence, lot 6, 7th line, east, Mono, to Mono East cemetery on Monday afternoon. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Armstrong, of Alton, and Rev. J. A. Black, of Mono Mills. The impressive service of the Orange Order was read over the open grave by Bros. W. G. Duke, W. M., and Thos. McCandless, Chaplain of Mono Mills L.O.L. No. 192. The burial service of the Royal Black Knights was also read by Sir Knight H. A. Duke, of Orangeville. The pallbearers were Messrs. Wm. Cobean, R. J. Mills, R. J. Halbert, W. G. Duke, Enoch Snell and Thos. McCandless. . Deceased leaves to mourn his loss a widow and a family of four sons and three daughters. The latter are Robert M. McCutcheon, of Foam Lake, Sask., John, of Durham, James on the homestead and William, Misses Bella, Lizzie and Ethel at home. The widow and family have the sympathy of the community in their bereavement.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes : "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicine. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

PAIN NEARLY DROVE HIM MAD

Suffered Horribly Until He Turned To "Fruit-a-tives"

J. A. CORRIVEAU

DRYSDALE, ONT., June 15th, 1913

"I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them strongly to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain at the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to inflammation of the brain but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives" and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness."

J. A. CORRIVEAU.

For Headaches, Neuralgia, Rheumatism and other diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood, "Fruit-a-tives" is invaluable and infallible.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Mrs. W. E. Lyons.

Mrs. W. E. Lyons, eldest daughter of the late T. L. Mercer, of Orangeville, died at her home near Terra Cotta last Friday from hemorrhage of the brain. She was 54 years of age and leaves a husband, four daughters and one son. Dr. Fred Mercer, a dentist in Edmonton, and Mr. Frank Mercer, a jeweller in Treherne, Man., are brothers. The brothers are both east for the funeral, which took place to Cheltenham cemetery yesterday morning.

Death of James Huston.

Mr. James H. Huston, an old resident of Orangeville, passed away at the home of his son-in-law, Mr. G. E. Island, Sandhill, on Monday. Deceased was in his 72nd year and was a widower, his wife having died a number of years ago. Mr. Wilson Huston, John St., and Mrs. Island are the only surviving members of the family. The funeral took place from his son's residence to the Forest Lawn cemetery yesterday afternoon. Rev. W. M. Morris conducted the services at the house and grave.

An Old Resident Called Home

Death has claimed one of the oldest and most respected residents of Peel County in the person of Mr. Robert McConnell, who died at his late residence in the village of Summerville on Tuesday, March 31st. Deceased was born in Brampton in 1829 and lived in that town for some time. He was also a resident of Caledon township for many years. Mrs. McConnell, who died about 20 years ago, was a native of Caledon. Mr. McConnell is survived by five of a family living and one dead. Two daughters—Mrs. Leonard and Mrs. King—reside in Toronto. The sons are D. McConnell, a merchant in Hillsburg, William McConnell on the old farm at Summerville and Rev. J. A. McConnell, Presbyterian minister at Blind River. The other daughter, Mrs. Bell, died twelve years ago. Mr. McConnell was a lifelong member of the Presbyterian Church, a Reformer in politics, a kind father and husband and an excellent neighbor. The funeral will be held to the family burying plot in Caledon on Friday, April 3rd. His departure will be deeply mourned by his family and many friends.

Mr. Robert McCutcheon

The death of Mr. Robert McCutcheon, who was prominent in Mono municipal affairs for a number of years, occurred at his home on lot 21, 4th line, west, Caledon, last Friday. Mr. McCutcheon was only in his 60th year, but had been in failing health for a considerable time. He was almost blind, having partially lost his eyesight some years ago. He was a Presbyterian, a strong Orangeman and a Conservative. He served in the Mono Council for several years and contested the reeveship with Mr. Alex. McDonald on two occasions. Our Mono Mills correspondent gives family particulars and a full report of the funeral, which was held from the home of his son, James, lot 6, 7th line, east, Mono, to the Mono East cemetery on Monday afternoon.

A Fine Entertainment.

Miss Lucy Webling and Mr. Walter McRaye, who are to appear at the Fire Brigade concert on Tuesday evening, April 14th, opened their Canadian tour in Berlin. Of their opening concert, Principal Williams, of the Berlin Collegiate Institute, says, "They gave us one of the finest entertainments I have ever heard. I heartily recommend them." The Daily News-Record says, "The entertainment was immensely pleasing." The Berlin Daily Telegraph comments thus, "The programme was delightfully humorous and mirth-provoking."

THE ONTARIO STALLION ACT

5.—(1) No person shall stand, travel or offer for use any stallion unless and until the name, description and pedigree of such stallion has been enrolled and a certificate of such enrolment procured as hereinafter provided.

(2) For the purpose of enrolment the owner of every stallion shall submit to the Board all evidence of the breeding and ownership of such stallion, and upon receipt of same and payment of the fee, the Board shall issue a certificate accordingly. Fee $2.00.

(3) All certificates of enrolment shall be renewed annually in accordance with the regulations and upon the payment of the fee hereinafter provided. Fee $1.00.

(4) In addition, if desired by the owner, any stallion may be inspected as herein provided, in which case the report of such inspection shall form a part of the record of enrolment. Fee $5.00.

6. (2) Every stallion shall be enrolled in the name of the owner at the time of the enrolment, and in case of a change of ownership the enrolment shall be deemed to be cancelled unless within thirty days thereafter evidence of the change of ownership satisfactory to the Board has been furnished to the Board, in which case a transfer certificate shall be issued by the Board. Fee $1.00.

(4) When a stallion has reached the age of eight years the first inspection thereafter shall be the final inspection and the enrolment made on the report of such final inspection shall continue to form part of the enrolment and a certificate shall be granted in accordance therewith on each subsequent renewal of such enrolment. — Inspection is good for two years for all horses less than eight years of age.

12.—(1) The certificate of enrolment of any stallion shall form a prominent part of any newspaper or other printed advertisement issued to advertise such stallion.

(2) Every poster issued shall contain a copy of the certificate of enrolment printed in bold face and conspicuous type and shall not contain any illustrations, pedigree or other matter which is untruthful or misleading.

15.—Every person who is guilty of a contravention of any of the provisions of this Act shall incur a penalty of not more than $100 nor less than $25, recoverable under The Ontario Summary Convictions Act.

Reg. 20.—Each owner of a stallion shall transmit to the Secretary of the Board a copy of every poster or other advertisement issued or used for the purpose of advertising such stallion forthwith after the issue thereof. In default of compliance with this regulation, the Board may cancel any certificate issued for such stallion.

As the Enrolment Board are arranging for the rigid enforcement of the Act this present year, they would therefore request all stallion owners to comply promptly with the provisions of the Act, as advertising a horse which is not enrolled is a contravention of the law and therefore all owners wishing to have bills printed should enrol at once.

Presentation in Erin.

On Tuesday night upwards of one hundred neighbors and friends of Mr. and Mrs. Neil Smith, North Erin, gathered at their home and presented Mr. Smith with a solid gold watch and fob and Mrs. Smith with a dozen pearl handled solid silver knives and forks. The presentations were made by Mr. John Barber and Miss Annie McDougall. The accompanying address was read by Mr. Malcolm McCormick. Mr. Duncan Sinclair presided and short addresses were made by a number of those present, all speaking very highly of the good qualities of Mr. and Mrs. Smith as neighbors. Mr. Smith spoke briefly in behalf of Mrs. Smith and himself. The rest of the night was spent pleasantly in dancing, excellent music being provided by Dyer Bros. orchestra and Mr. Neil McCormick. Thos. Barber and James Milloy made capable floor managers. A sumptuous repast was served about midnight. Mr. and Mrs. Smith entertained their guests with generous hospitality and when the gathering dispersed all repaired to their homes feeling that they had spent the time of their lives.

QUICK CURE FOR HIS RHEUMATISM

Bourg Louis, Que., Mar. 30.. (Special).—How quickly Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure rheumatism and other forms of Kidney Disease when taken in the early stages is shown in the case of Mr. Robert. J. Pyle, a well-known farmer living near here.

In an interview Mr. Pyle says : "Working in the cold, wet weather was the cause of my trouble, and for about a year I had occasional cramps in the muscles and stiffness in the joints. I was often dizzy and felt depressed and low spirited. I was nervous and my skin itched and burned at night.

"When Rheumatism was finally added to my ills I decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. One box cured me completely, and I have had no return of my trouble."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cured Mr. Pyle's Rheumatism because it was caused by sick Kidneys. Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure sick Kidneys. If you have any two of Mr. Pyle's symptoms, you have sick Kidneys and you need Dodd's Kidney Pills.

SUCH LETTERS AS THIS EXPLAIN WHY

Everybody Uses Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a Spring Tonic

Mrs. Jules Scarbo, Moulinette, Stormont Co., Ont., writes:—"I think it is my duty to write and let you know the great benefit I received from taking Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Early last fall I became greatly run down, could scarcely eat anything and could not sleep at night. The least sound would make me start and I was so nervous I could hardly bear to have anyone talk to me. I tried many medicines but none helped me and I was in this extremely nervous condition for five months.

"I read in the almanac about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and bought 3 boxes from Mr. Armstrong, druggist at Mille Roches. Before completing the first box I felt the benefit and now believe the cure to be thorough and complete. I am feeling fine and eat and sleep well, thanks to the wonderful good, accomplished by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I wish everybody troubled as I was knew of this grand medicine, which is so quick in action and so permanent in results. It will always have my praise."

You can avoid the feelings of fatigue and depression which make spring so dreaded by very many who are not in robust health. Sleeplessness, irritability, indigestion and headaches soon disappear when you increase the vitality of the mind and body by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Write for free booklet on the "Nerves."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the greatest of spring restoratives, because it actually forms new, red corpuscles in the blood.

THE OLD STAGE HERO.

He of the Mid-Victorian Age Has Gone From Us Forever.

The stage hero of the mid-Victorian age wept on all the available articles of furniture when his manly heart was wrung. He was certain to observe a noble silence at exactly the wrong time, enabling the gay and glittering gentleman who was more than suspected of being an atheist to get the girl. He was cross once in awhile, when he was keeping another's secret at the expense of his own character and somebody took him at his word.

But oh, how dependable he was! How sure to meet a train or make an excellent omelet if the fragile heroine had mislaid the cookbook! How strong he was and how fond of carrying people upstairs. How well he brought up his first wife's children if he was a widower, or the heroine if he was her guardian!

He will not come again—not he nor such as he. He has passed, always with a certain dignity, his heroine's drooping curls brushing his protecting arm, into the country of last year's snow, and year before last's presidential candidate, and all forgotten, irrecoverable things. And, as his favorite author, the Swan of Avon, said, "We shall not gaze upon his like again."—Atlantic.

WHICH WOULD YOU CHOOSE?

All the Land In Great Britain or Calico to Cover It?

If—and don't forget the "if"—you were offered as a present either all the land in the United Kingdom or a piece of cheap, common calico of the same area, which would you choose?

Probably, without a moment's hesitation, you would say, "The land," and would imagine that you had got very much the better of the bargain. From one point of view, of course, this would be so, for land lasts longer than does calico. On the other hand, however, you would be choosing very much the cheaper of the two offered gifts.

The land of the United Kingdom, including town areas, is estimated to be worth £2,500,000,000. A piece of cheap calico of the same size as the United Kingdom would cost more than £9,000,000,000.

Difficult to believe, isn't it? Still, the facts cannot be denied. Average agricultural land may be reckoned as being worth £20 an acre; building land, say, twenty-five miles from Charing Cross, £100 an acre; ten miles from Charing Cross, £500 an acre. Now, a common calico costs £121 an acre, a good calico £200, while a good quality linoleum costs £750 and an ordinary Turkey carpet £3,000 an acre.—London Answers.

The Spy In the Reading Room.

An interesting story reaches me, says a London correspondent, of an agent of the Russian imperial police having been stationed in the reading room of the British museum for the purpose of noting the arrival of revolutionaries in England. The type of man who is driven out of Russia is generally the intellectual, and the reading room is probably the first place he seeks out after his arrival in London. My informant tells me that the spy used until recently to sit at a desk near the door, whence he could observe everybody that entered and used to work his way steadily through the monumental catalogue of the museum, taking out books which he opened, but did not read, in alphabetical order.

Welcomes a Whistle.

"It may be ag'in th' statoots," said "Big Barney" O'Toole as he lolled in the assembly room of a police station, "but whin I'm poundin' th' pavement after midnight there's nothin' I like better to hear out 'f a la-ad than a good healthy whistle. A la-ad what's pipin' a tune about his love or th' Blue Ridge mount'ns o' Virginia is seldom up t' anny divilitry. Whin a crook has somethin' on his mind he ain't advertisin' himself so ye can loosen yer grip on th' locust. When ye hears th' la-ad wit' th' whistle he's yer fr'ud."—New York Tribune.

She Would Get Even.

Tired out with an afternoon's shopping, the mother sat back in her easy chair to recite in detail the afternoon's experiences to a sympathetic home circle.

"And to cap it all I met that horrid Annie Green, and she was very impudent to me as usual," she wailed.

"The mean thing," sympathetically snapped out six-year-old Ella. "Why didn't you impudent her right back?"—New York Sun.

No One to Lean On.

"What's the matter, Tommy?"

"Oh, I'm tired of school. I'd like to go to bed for a week."

"Why, how's that?"

"Well, you see, I'm in a very awkward position. I was next to the boy at the bottom of the class—and he's left.—Manchester Guardian.

WOMAN WOULD NOT GIVE UP

Though Sick and Suffering; At Last Found Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Richmond, Pa. — "When I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was in a dreadfully rundown state of health, had internal troubles, and was so extremely nervous and prostrated that if I had given in to my feelings I would have been in bed. As it was I had hardly strength at times to be on my feet and what I did do was by a great effort. I could not sleep at night and of course felt very bad in the morning, and had a steady headache.

"After taking the second bottle I noticed that the headache was not so bad, I rested better, and my nerves were stronger. I continued its use until it made a new woman of me, and now I can hardly realize that I am able to do so much as I do. Whenever I know any woman in need of a good medicine I highly praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. FRANK CLARK, 3146 N. Tulip St., Richmond, Pa.

Women Have Been Telling Women for forty years how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored their health when suffering with female ills. This accounts for the enormous demand for it from coast to coast. If you are troubled with any ailment peculiar to women why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? It will pay you to do so. Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

A Washington Farmer's Good Roads Endorsement

MR. FRANK TERRACE, ADDRESSING THE Good Roads Convention at Tacoma, Washington, gave the following enthusiastic testimony in favor of good roads:

"I am a cabbage grower. I haul my produce to the sauerkraut factory at South Seattle. Before the road over which I travel was built, I had to get up at 4 o'clock in the morning to start on my journey. The limit of the load I could haul with a team of 1800 pound horses was 2500 pounds, and after visiting the factory I would arrive back at my home late in the evening. But look at the difference now that a permanent hard surface has been laid down. I start on my trip about 8 o'clock and need only a team weighing 1400 pounds to haul a load of 5000 pounds of cabbage, which is double my previous capacity. And, best of all, I find on my return to the house early in the afternoon, that I have finished the day's work without the horses having turned a hair."

Concrete Roads Mean Road Economy

They prevent your road taxes being spent in patching up roads that never will be good roads.

They are the cheapest kind of roads at the end of ten, fifteen or twenty years because they practically eliminate the cost of upkeep. They enable you to haul bigger loads with less effort and less wear and tear on horses and vehicles. They increase land values, better conditions generally, and decrease the cost of living.

Write for, free, Good Roads literature, and learn how good roads will benefit you.

Mother Earth.

When Junius Brutus and the sons of Tarquin asked the famous Delphic oracle who was to succeed Superbus on the throne of Rome they received for an answer, "He who shall first kiss his mother." As the two princes were hastening home to fulfill what they thought was meant Brutus fell to the earth and cried out, "Thus do I kiss thee, O earth, the mother of us all!" This is perhaps the earliest recorded instance of the use of the term "Mother Earth."

Mannish.

Mr. Dubley—How awfully mannish she is!

Miss Smart—She is, indeed.

Mr. Dubley — Yes, and the funny part of it is she thinks people admire her for being that way. It's queer she doesn't realize that people are only laughing at her.

Miss Smart—Well, she's mannish even to that extent.

An Exalted Position.

"He used to be at the top of his profession, but one day he fell, and he will never again occupy his former exalted position."

"You surprise me. What was his position?"

"He was the apex of a 'human pyramid' with a team of acrobats."

DENTISTRY FOR TREES.

All Cavities Should Be Treated as Soon as They Appear.

Whether it is a shade or fruit tree a little judicious treatment of a cavity will often save the tree for many years of usefulness. Whether it be a branch or the main trunk the treatment will be the same. First all decayed or apparently decaying or diseased wood should be removed with a sharp chisel or knife until perfectly sound heartwood is exposed. Immediately wash the wound with a solution of copper sulphate in the proportion of one pound of sulphate to five gallons of water.

As soon as this has been done fill the cavity with a thin mortar made by mixing one part of cement with three parts of clean sand. When it has become stiff, but not hard, face it on the outside with thin cement, using a trowel to smooth the cement over all parts that have become injured. If a cavity or split should occur near a fork of the tree it would be an additional safeguard to put a long bolt through both branches so as to hold them together. When the cement hardens in a cavity the trunk will be perfectly solid, and decay will be arrested.—Farm and Fireside.

Table Manners In Old France.

Could we restore for half an hour the dinner table of old France and obtain half a dozen instantaneous photographs of a royal banquet at any era between the reigns of Francis I. and Louis Quatorze such a "cataract of laughter" would be heard as might disturb the serenity of Louis in paradise. The duchess, her napkin tied securely round her neck, would be seen mumbling a bone, another fair creature scouring her plate with her bread, a gallant courtier using his doublet or the tablecloth as a towel for his fingers and two footmen holding a yard of damask under a lady's chin while she emptied her goblet at a draft. During a feast of inordinate length it was sometimes necessary to substitute a clean cloth for the one which the carelessness or bad manners of the guests had reduced to a deplorable condition. —"An Idler In Old France."

DESTROY THE DOGS.

Walter Duff's little girl, Dorothy, was on her way to school on Thursday morning when she was attacked by a vicious dog owned by W. T. Crawley, Webberville, which was following his rig. The child was knocked down and severely bitten in a dozen or more places on the face and arm, and the ferocious brute did not desist in its attack until Mrs. Crawley got out of the cutter and drove it off. Dr. Smith dressed the wounds of the child and ordered the dog chained up for fourteen days to see if rabies develope, before it is despatched. The government should take stringent measures to rid the country of about nine out of every ten dogs that at present exist in the province.—Creemore Star.

Less Dyspepsia Now —Here's The Reason

The fact that there is less dyspepsia and indigestion in this community than there used to be is largely, we believe, due to the extensive use of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, hundreds of packages of which we have sold. No wonder we have faith in them. No wonder we are willing to offer them to you for trial entirely at our risk.

Among other things, they contain Pepsin and Bismuth, two of the greatest digestive aids known to medical science. They soothe the inflamed stomach, allay pain, check heartburn and distress, help to digest the food, and tend to quickly restore the stomach to its natural, comfortable, healthy state.

There is no red tape about our guarantee. It means just what it says. We'll ask you no questions. Your word is enough for us. If Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets don't restore your stomach to health and make your digestion easy and comfortable, we want you to come back for your money. They are sold only at the 7,000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only by us. Three sizes, 25c, 50c and $1.00. T. F. & T. J. Brown, Druggists, Orangeville, Ont.

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER IV.

The Temperament of an Artist.

"You may sit there and smoke, and look out upon your wonderful Paris," she said lightly. "You may talk—if you can talk cheerfully, not unless."

"And you?" he asked.

"Well, if I find your conversation interesting I shall listen. If not, I have plenty to think about," she answered, leaning back in her chair, and watching the smoke from her own cigarette curl upwards.

"For instance?"

She smiled.

"How I am to earn enough 'sous' for my dinner to-morrow—or failing that, what I can sell."

His face darkened.

"And yet," he said, "you bid me talk cheerfully, or not at all."

"Why not? Your spirits at least should be good. It is not you who runs the risk of going dinnerless to-morrow."

"You know," he muttered, "you know quite well that your troubles are far more likely to weigh upon me than my own. Do you think I am utterly selfish?"

She raised her eyebrows.

He stared at her incredulously, and she laughed very softly.

"What a gloomy person you are!" she murmured. "You call yourself an artist—but you have no temperament. The material cares of life hang about you like a millstone. A doubt as to your dinner to-morrow would make you miserable to-night. You know I call that positively wicked. It is not at all what I expected either. On the whole, I think that I have been disappointed with the life here. There is so little abandon, so little real joyousness."

"And yet," he murmured, "one of the greatest of our artists has declared that the true spirit of Bohemianism is denied to your sex."

"He was probably right," she declared. "Bohemianism is the least understood word ever coined. I do not think that I have the Bohemian spirit at all."

He looked at her thoughtfully. She wore a plain black dress, reaching almost to her throat—her small oval face, with the large brown eyes, was colourless, delicately expressive, yet with something mysterious in its Sphinx-like immobility. A woman hard to read, who seemed to delight in keeping locked up behind that fascinating rigidity of feature the intense sensibility which had been revealed to him, her master, only in occasional and rare moments of enthusiasm. She reminded him sometimes of the one holy and ineffable Madonna, at others of Berode, the great courtezan of her day, who had sent kings away from her doors, and had just announced her intention of ending her life in a convent. Courtlaw himself, plain of feature, rugged, but a man of many emotions and a great artist, found in her presence something akin to inspiration. The faces of most women are like open books. This girl, young, friendless, unsuccessful, met misfortune with a jest, revealed herself to no one, not even to him, maintaining side by side with the utmost freedom of deportment a delicate aloofness which seemed to trace with fairy fingers a line imperceptible yet vividly real and efficient.

"I believe that you are right," he said softly. "It is the worst of including in our vocabulary words which have no definite meaning, perhaps I should say of which the meaning varies according to one's personal point of view. You, for instance, you live, you are not afraid to live. Yet you make our Bohemianism seem like a vulgar thing."

She stirred gently in her chair.

"My friend," she said, "I have been your pupil for two years. You have watched all the uncouth creations of my brain come sprawling out upon the canvas, and besides, we have been companions. Yet the fact remains that you do not understand me at all. No, not one little bit. It is extraordinary."

"It is," he replied, "the one humiliation of my life. My opportunities have been immense, and my failure utter. If I had been your companion only, and not your master, I might very well have been content to accept you for what you seem. But there have been times, Anna, when your work has startled me. Ill-drawn, without method or sense of proportion, you have put wonderful things on to canvas, have drawn them out of yourself, notwithstanding your mechanical inefficiency. God knows how you did it. You are utterly baffling."

She laughed at him easily and mirthfully.

"Dear friend," she said, "do not magnify me into a physiological problem. I should only disappoint you terribly some day. I think I know where I am puzzling you now——"

"Then for Heaven's sake be merciful," he exclaimed. "Lift up one corner of the curtain for me."

"Very well. You shall tell me if I am wrong. You see me here, an admitted failure in the object to which I have devoted two years of my life. You know that I am practically destitute, without means or any certain knowledge of where my next meal is coming from. I speak frankly, because you also know that no possible extremity would induce me to accept help from any living person. You notice that I have recently spent ten francs in a box of the best Russian cigarettes, and that there are roses upon my table. You observe that I am, as usual, fairly cheerful, and moderately amiable. It surprises you. You do not understand, and you would like to. Very well! I will try to help you."

Her hand hung over the chair nearest to him. He looked at it eagerly, but made no movement to take it. During all their long comradeship he had never so much as ventured to hold fingers. This was David Courtlaw, whose ways, too, had never been very different from the ways of other men as regards her sex.

"You see, it comes after all," she continued, "from certain original convictions which have become my religion. Rather a magniloquent term, perhaps, but what else am I to say? One of these is that the most absolutely selfish thing in the world is to give way to depression, to think of one's troubles at all except how to overcome them. I spend many delightful hours thinking of the pleasant and beautiful things of life. I decline to waste a single second even in considering the ugly ones. Do you know that this becomes a habit?"

"If you would only teach us all," he murmured "how to acquire it."

"I suppose people would say it is a matter of temperament," she continued. "With me I believe that it is more. It has become a part of the order of my life. Whatever may happen to-morrow I shall be none the better for anticipating its miseries to-day."

"I wonder," he said, a trifle irrelevantly, "what the future has in store for you."

She shrugged her shoulders.

"Is that not rather a profitless speculation, my friend?"

He seemed deaf to her interruption. His grey eyes burned under his shaggy eyebrows. He leaned towards her as though anxious to see more of her face than that faint delicate profile gleaming like marble in the uncertain light.

"You were born for great things," he said huskily. "For great passions, for great accomplishments. Will you find your destiny, I wonder, or will you go through life like so many others—a wanderer, knocking ever at empty doors, homeless to the last? Oh, if one could but find the way to your heart."

She laughed gaily.

"Dear friend," she said, "remember that you are speaking to one who has failed in the only serious object which she has ever sought to accomplish. My destiny, I am afraid, is going to lead me into the ruts."

He shook his head.

"You were never born," he declared, "to follow the well worn roads. I wonder," he added, after a moment's pause, "whether you ever realize how young you are."

"Young? I am twenty-four."

"Yet you are very young. Anna, why will you persist in this single-handed combat with life?"

"Don't," she cried.

"But I must, I will," he answered fiercely. "Oh, I know you would not stop me if you could. This you cannot. You are the woman I love, Anna. Let me make your future for you. Don't be afraid that I shall stunt it. I will give you a broad free life. You shall have room to develop, you shall live as you will, where you will, only give me the right to protect you, to free you from all these petty material cares."

She laid her hand softly upon his.

"Dear friend," she said, "do you not think that you are breaking an unspoken compact? I am very sorry. In your heart you know quite well that all that you have said is useless."

"Ay," he repeated, looking away from her. "Useless—worse than useless."

"You are foolish," she declared, with a note of irritability in her tone. "You would appear to be trying to destroy a comradeship which has been very, very pleasant. For you know that I have made up my mind to dig a little way into life single-handed. I, too, want to understand—to walk with my head in the light. Love is a great thing, and happiness a joy. Let me go my own way towards them. We may meet—who can tell? But I will not be fettered, even though you would make the chains of roses. Listen."

She stopped short. There was a sharp knocking at the outside door. Courtlaw rose to his feet.

"It is too late for visitors," she remarked. "I wonder would you mind seeing who it is."

Courtlaw crossed the room and threw open the door. He had come to Anna's rooms from a dinner party, and he was in evening dress. Sir John, who was standing outside, looked past him at the girl still sitting in the shadow.

"I believe," he said stiffly, "that these are the apartments of Miss Pellissier. I must apologize for disturbing you at such an unseemly hour, but I should be very much obliged if Miss Pellissier would allow me a few minutes' conversation. My name is Ferringhall—Sir John Ferringhall."

BABY'S OWN TABLETS USED FOR YEARS

When a mother uses only one medicine as long as there are little ones in the home it certainly bears grand testimony to the value of that particular remedy. Thousands of mothers use nothing else but Baby's Own Tablets. Concerning them Mrs. M. LeBlanc, Memramcook West, N.B., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my little ones for the past ten years and know of nothing to equal them during teething time or for colic, constipation and indigestion. All my neighbors who have used them think as I do." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers, or by mail, at 25 cents a box, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MRS. ADAM DENSMORE.

One of West Luther's Pioneer Resident Passes Away.

In the death of Mrs. Adam Densmore sr. in West Luther on Friday, the last link of pioneer life in this part severed, and an interesting and useful life ended. Born in Ahoghill, County Antrim, Ireland, in 1816, Mary Telford lived to see six different monarchs reign on the throne of Great Britain; witnessed a complete transformation in methods of travel; the practical use of electricity developed in the telegraph, telephone, power and domestic service. In 1846 she and her husband, Alex. Walker, and two children, set out for the new land, Canada, and after a most memorable voyage for her of seven weeks and three days, the sailing barque came to anchor in quarantine. Black fever had broken out on board, claiming her two children who were buried at sea, and her husband died on board ship. With a grief bereaved heart she faced the changed conditions of life in a new country, away from her friends and relatives, but followed out the original intention of coming to Upper Canada, stopping at Port Credit. Here she met Adam Densmore, whom she married in 1847 and about a year afterwards they came to Erin township where they lived till 1855. In this year they moved up to Luther, settling on lot 29, concession 1, the only other settler here at that time being the late Dr. McPherson. Here they pioneered and persevered, crowding down discouragements of frozen crops and disappointments of immediate better surroundings, with the hope that characterizes every true pioneer. At last success crowned their efforts for their forest home became one of the finest farms in the district, while each of her sons succeeded well and are possessors of fine properties. Mr. Densmore died in 1885. Mrs. Densmore continued to live with her youngest child, Robert, and when his wife died a few years ago, the aged mother took up the labor of caring for his home and child. She possessed a marvellous physical strength, never requiring a doctor till she was over seventy years of age and was quite able to do the work of the home till about a year ago. Since then her strength failed gradually and though not suffering any ailment she gradually grew weaker and at last quietly slept into the great beyond. She was a great lover of her home, only leaving it once when 78 years of age and then with her son, Robert, when they took a trip to the Niagara district, and this was the first ride on a railroad. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church. She leaves an elder brother, William Telford, in Ireland, in his 100th year; a sister, Mrs. Campbell, mother of Samuel Campbell, in her 94th year; and the following children: Adam and Robert, in West Luther; Mrs. George Keast, of Preeceville, Sask.; Mrs. Wm. Owens, of Olds, Alta.; and Mrs. Joseph Berry, of Edmonton. The remains were interred in South Luther cemetery on Sunday afternoon.—Star & Vidette.

REPLENISH YOUR BLOOD IN THE SPRING

Just now you are feeling "out of sorts"—not your usual self. Quite exhausted at times and cannot devote real energy to your work. Sleep does not rest you and you wake up feeling "all tired out." Perhaps rheumatism is flying through your muscles and joints, or may be your skin is disfigured by rashes, boils or pimples. Headaches, twinges of neuralgia, fits of nervousness, irritability of temper and a disordered stomach often increase your discomfort in the spring.

The cause—winter has left its mark on you. These troubles are signs that your blood is poor and watery, that your nerves are exhausted. You must renew and enrich your blood at once and restore tone to your tired nerves, or there may be a complete breakdown. The most powerful remedy for these spring ailments in men, women and children is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, because these pills cleanse bad blood and strengthen weak nerves.

New, rich, red blood—your greatest need in spring—is plentifully created by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and with this new, pure blood in your veins you quickly regain health and increase your strength. Then your skin becomes clear, your eyes bright, your nerves strong, and you feel better, eat better, sleep better, and are able to do your work.

Begin your spring tonic treatment to-day for the blood and nerves with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—the Pills that strengthen.

These Pills are sold by most dealers, but do not be persuaded to take "something just the same." If you can't get the genuine Pills from your dealer they will be sent you by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

In Memoriam.

Lines written in memory of Susan Ettie Fines, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Fines, who died April 2nd, 1912:—

Two years have almost passed and gone
Since one we loved so well
Was taken from her home on earth
With Jesus Christ to dwell.

But she is gone, her body rests
Within the silent tomb
And soon we hope to meet our darling
Where flowers forever bloom.

Her smiling face is missed by all
Who knew and loved her here
The music of her pleasant voice
No longer greets our ear.

The tender hearts of those who watched
O'er her with loving care
Are often saddened by the sight
Of Ettie's vacant chair.

Her welcome step no more is heard
Across our dwelling floor
We miss the merry laugh that cheered
Our hearts in days of yore.

And help us gracious Lord
Whate'er our trials may be
Enable us to calmly say
Thy will, not ours, be done.

FAMILY.

LAUREL.

Down in the fragrant clover
Where the honeyed blossoms grow
I, the Bumble-bee, thought to hide me
Till the sun would melt the snow.

But short was the delicious quiet,
For the Banner is part of my life,
And its voice last week has called me
Back to the busy strife.

Indeed I am not indolent
More than verses do I grind
With hard toil my back is bent
Supplying food for all Bee-kind.

Many men in controversy
Wondrous wisdom do display
So to enlighten the individual
I will tell you what they say.

A magnate of our hockey team
Has been looking very black,
Not because Grand Valley won the game
But a stick hit him a whack.

Ach, faith we heard the Irishman,
At League on Tuesday, Then
I'll no' forget the Blarney
Sent from The Banner men.

In obedience to enactments framed
The G.O.R.A.B. met last week,
Some quivering toiler tried to tame
And thought to annihilate the meek.

Returning, laughing at the fun,
The driver so near upset the sleigh;
Its sad to tell the fate of one
Whirled swiftly in a waterway.

Its close upon the midnight chime
The fire is burning very slow,
So I, the Bumblebee, must wend
Away from all of Laurel's woe.

Carlaw—Fewster.

At Conover on Wednesday, March 18th, one of the prettiest weddings of the season was solemnized when Miss Edna Fewster, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Fewster, was united in holy bonds of matrimony to Oliver Carlaw, of Hornings Mills. The ceremony was performed at high noon by Rev. A. J. Toye, of Hornings Mills. The bride, who was given away by her father, entered the parlor to the strains of the bridal chorus from Lohengrin, played by Miss Ethel Leitch, of Hornings Mills. The bride looked charming in a gown of charmeuse satin and shadow lace trimmed with pearl lovers' knots, wearing the groom's gift, a beautiful pearl necklace and sunburst and carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses and maiden hair fern. Miss Edna Carlaw, daintily dressed in satin de chene, and carrying a basket of carnations and ferns, acted as flower girl. The groom's gift to the pianist was a gold safety pin with pearl bird and to the flower girl a gold locket and chain. After the usual congratulations the guests repaired to the beautifully decorated dining room, where an elaborate wedding breakfast was served, the tables being waited on by the Misses Sadie Fewster, Effie Lawrence, Ethel Leitch and Vera Hall. The gifts were both numerous and beautiful. The bride's travelling suit was navy blue corded silk with saxe blue hat and persian lamb furs. Amid showers of confetti the bride and groom left on an extended trip to Toronto, Oakville and Arthur. Those present from a distance were: W. Hall, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Wilson, Miss Vera Hall, Miss Effie Lawrence and G. Hardy, Oakville; Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Chambers, Orangeville — Free Press.

Death of John Tweedy

Grand Valley lost one of its oldest citizens last week in the person of Mr. John Tweedy, who passed away at the home of his son-in-law, Mr. T. J. McCulloch, on Monday, March 23rd, after a short illness from diabetes. Deceased, who was in his 90th year, was born in Armagh County, Ireland, but came to Canada with his parents when a child of three years. The family first settled in Toronto, or York, as it was then called, but a year or so later moved to a farm in East Garafraxa a mile or so west of Orangeville. Here the subject of our sketch resided until 1881, when he moved to East Luther, living for five years on a farm now occupied by Wm. Bates and afterwards taking up his residence in Grand Valley. His wife, who was Miss Maria White, died in 1907. The surviving members of his family are: Mrs. W. J. Buchanan, Kansas City; Samuel Tweedy, Gainsboro, Sask.; Mrs. J. I. Buchanan, Grand Valley; John Tweedy, Toronto; Johnston W. Tweedy, New York; Mrs. T. J. McCulloch, Grand Valley and Robt. L. Tweedy, Richards Landing, Ont. He is also survived by 30 grandchildren and no less than 20 great grandchildren. In his younger days Mr. Tweedy was a man of more than ordinary physical strength. He was a successful farmer and also found time to take an active interest in municipal and general politics. He served in the Garafraxa council and was also assessor and collector for the municipality. He was a staunch Conservative and an enthusiastic Orangeman, being one of the charter members of Jordan Hall L.O.L. No. 22, East Garafraxa. In religion he was a Presbyterian. The funeral was held from his late residence to the Union Cemetery in Grand Valley on Wednesday, March 25th. The pallbearers were Messrs. Wm. Braiden, Jos. Gillespie, Geo. Nodwell, T. C. Hamilton, Wm. McCulloch and Jas. Graham. Among the friends present from outside points were Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Buchanan, Kansas City, A. E. Campbell, Mrs. Roy D. Hughes and J. S. C. Brandon, Toronto; Mrs. S. B. Tweedy and daughter, Shelburne; John Greason and son, Laurel; Jos. Gillespie, Wm. Braiden and John Park, Orangeville, and Mr. and Mrs. A. McCaw, Mount Forest.

DO IT NOW.

WHILE the majority of our subscribers have already paid their subscriptions for 1914, quite a large number have neglected to attend to this important matter. Nearly all intend to pay, but the amount is small and it is either forgotten or neglected. It is so easy to forget small matters. This month we purpose sending notices to all who are still in arrears. Why not save us the trouble and expense of sending out these notices? If you intend to pay—and we take it for granted that you do—you can pay just as well without as with a notice and, by doing so, save the publishers a good deal of unnecessary trouble. Every subscriber can tell how his subscription stands by consulting his address label. If YOU are one of those who have not paid for 1914, do not forget or neglect any longer. Put yourself right with the publishers by paying now.

Moral Education.

"Moral Education in Canada" was the subject of a suggestive and instructive lecture, which Rev. E. F. Lanceley, pastor of Howard Park Methodist Church, Toronto, delivered in the school room of the Methodist Church here on Tuesday night. The lecture related largely to the question of morals in the public schools. Mr. Lanceley held that more time should be devoted to instruction on moral questions in our schools, and suggested the wisdom of having text books and a prescribed course of study. Discussing the matter of text books, the lecturer stated that the Book of Proverbs would be very suitable for that purpose. The lecture was followed with close interest, and upon its conclusion Mr. Lanceley was tendered a hearty vote of thanks, the motion being proposed by Mr. W. R. Liddy, seconded by Rev. G. W. Robinson. A good musical programme was provided, the numbers consisting of solos by Messrs. J. E. Jessop, — Matthews, and T. W. Huston, a duet by Messrs. Harding and Jessop, and a piano duet by Misses Patterson and King.

Give That Puny Child This Guaranteed Remedy

If your child is under-weight, listless, ailing, liable to get sick easily, it needs a medicine to build its weight and strength. For this purpose there is nothing else we know of that we can so strongly endorse as Rexall Olive Oil Emulsion. The remarkable success of this splendid medicine is due to the fact that it contains ingredients that tone the nerves, enrich the blood and furnish to the entire system the strength, weight and health-building substances it needs. And, it does all this without injuring the stomach. In fact, Rexall Olive Oil Emulsion is not only pleasant to take, but even the most sensitive stomach is benefitted by it, and the digestion improved. On the other hand, it contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs, which most parents object to giving their children. It does its good work by taking hold of the weakness and builds the body up to its natural strength, at the same time making it strong to resist disease.

If Rexall Olive Oil Emulsion doesn't build your child up, feed the stunted, puny muscles, and make the little one lively, strong, well, and full of the animal spirits children are meant by nature to have, come back and tell us and get your money back. We don't want you to lose a cent. We think this is no more than fair, and it leaves you no cause to hesitate. For old people also—for convalescents—for all who are nervous, tired out, run-down, no matter what the cause—we offer Rexall Olive Oil Emulsion with the same guarantee of entire satisfaction or money back. Sold only at the 7,000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only by us. $1.00. T. F. and T. J. Brown, Druggists, Orangeville, Ont.

H. S. CONVOCATION.

Successful 1912-13 Pupils Receive Their Diplomas.

The High School Convocation, which took place in the Opera House on Friday night, attracted a capacity house. The students and their friends turned out in full force and many citizens showed their interest in the school and its work by their presence. The pupils have evidently developed a partiality for the stage, for one important feature of the programme was the presentation of a clever adaptation of the old Shakespearean favorite "The Merchant of Venice." The plot followed the lines of the original play somewhat closely, although it was evident from the commencement of the performance that, in the language of the posters, the version, which the students had selected for the exercise of their latent dramatic talent, was undoubtedly "revised, modernized" and brought "thoroughly up to date." Antonio, instead of appearing as a wealthy merchant, was the captain of the High School football team and his friends Bassanio and Gratiano showed a healthy interest in this popular twentieth century pastime. Even Shylock, Jew and wealthy gambler as he was represented to be, had been a famous football player and still found profitable recreation backing successful teams. Bassanio, who is in love with the fair Portia, is compelled to make his choice of three caskets containing examinations on Caesar, Virgil and Cicero and is furthermore under the strict necessity of choosing the Caesar casket in order to win her hand. Antonio seeks to aid his friend's suit by hiring a Caesar translation from Shylock, the condition imposed by the lender being that, if it it not returned on a specified date, he may cut off a pound of Antonio's heir nearest the brain. Jessica, Shylock's ward, refuses the hand of her rich but cordially hated guardian. Meantime Bassanio had omitted to return the key and Shylock, whose hatred of Antonio had been intensified by the news that the football captain had eloped with Jessica, determined to have his revenge by exacting the penalty of his bond, namely the pound of hair. The trial scene followed the familiar lines of the original play, except that Antonio was saved from the cruel fate that Shylock had planned, not so much by the skilful pleading of Portia as by Professor Sweigenbaugenblumenheimer's timely discovery with the aid of an X-ray apparatus that the football captain had no brains. At this stage a mouse, which is noticed making a furtive attempt to cross the stage throws the actors into confusion and alarm. Portia and Nerissa hastily mount chairs, their caps fall off and they stand recognized. The curtain falls with the Duke pronouncing his benediction on the newly wedded couples.

Taken as a whole the performance was highly creditable to the High School Literary Society, under whose auspices the Play was given. The staging was good and the rich and pleasing costumes of the performers were uniformly appropriate to the roles in which they appeared. Miss Elsie McArton as Portia and Miss Greta Golden as Nerissa carried off the honors of the evening, both looking and speaking their parts in the most approved fashion. Their dialogue in the second act, wherein they discussed the various suitors was full of interest. Some of the local allusions were decidedly pointed, but they were apparently relished by the students, who were in a better position than outsiders to appreciate the point of the jokes. Miss Edna Keith made a charming Nerissa and Miss Rena Fennell was prim and precise as Miss Abbie S. Threedlee, a teacher. Her lines were noticeable for their brevity, but if what she said was lacking in length it was certainly very much to the point. Mary Gabriel won hearty and well-deserved applause in the role of Mrs. Gobbo, an Irish washerwoman. Her dialogue with Launcelot, when the latter attempts to convince her that he is really her son, was very amusing. Mr. Ewart MacPherson's acting in the role of Launcelot was particularly clever. Walter Dahl did well as Antonio, as did Trueman Kellie and Frederick Lewis in the roles of Gratiano and Bassanio. The three young men showed unmistakable talent in their respective parts. Reginald King displayed versatility and considerable dramatic ability in the difficult role of Shylock. Norman Collins made a stately and dignified Duke of Venice. Abigail Hunt as Antonio's mother and Miriam Leighton as Polly, Portia's maid, were both very good indeed. Percival Harding's serenade in the part of Signor Rafaelo Trovatore was admirably given and won a merited encore. Ernest White, who took the part of the Professor, assumed the air and swagger of that important and somewhat pompous personage with great facility. Wilmer Rowan was impassive as the policeman, but used his baton effectively whenever occasion demanded it. Gobbo was the chief offender and the wand of authority was frequently requisitioned to subdue his superabundant spirits. A number of the boys appeared on the stage in football togs and gave a lively exhibition of scrimmaging in what was supposed to be a great Thanksgiving football match preceding Antonio's arrest in the last act.

Prior to the final act diplomas were presented to the successful 1912-13 students. Mayor Island, who presided during this part of the programme, introduced Mr. W. R. Liddy, Inspector of Public Schools, who made the presentations with the assistance of Principal Steele and the other members of the teaching staff. The prizes for the shooting competitions were also presented, the presentations being made by Rev. G. W. Tebbs, of the High School Trustee Board.

It was shortly after eleven o'clock when the programme was brought to a close with the singing of The National Anthem.

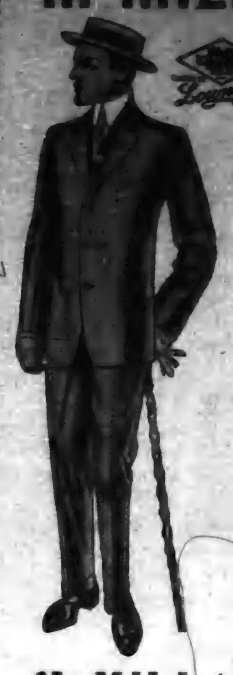
The Gillespie Stores.

The Retail Druggist for March contains photos and two full page articles descriptive of the Gillespie Drug Stores in Fort William, which, as many of our readers know, are conducted by Messrs. W. H. and J. R. Gillespie, formerly of this town. The following extract from the article will serve to show how rapidly this business has expanded:—

The growth of the business of the Gillespie Drug Stores, of Fort William, Ont., bears evidence to the possibilities for accomplishing appreciable things in the drug trade today, when the proper viewpoint in regard to business progress is secured and the proper methods are made use of. There are now four Gillespie Drug Stores in Fort William, and they are all the result of less than ten years of business endeavor, in which aggressiveness and commercialism in the trade have been prominent.

The firm that has built up this business is made up of W. H. and J. R. Gillespie. W. H. Gillespie claims Orangeville, Ont., as his home. He spent a number of years in Toronto and Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., coming to Fort William from the latter city in 1904. He opened his first store on May Street on May 1, 1905, and that was the nucleus of the present business. In 1910 his brother, J. R. Gillespie, became associated with him, and expansion was decided on.

Early in 1911 the modern and well equipped store at the corner of Simpson and Bethune Streets was opened, while later in the same year, they branched out further by opening a store on Syndicate Street, opposite the Union Station. Each of the established stores continued to prosper, and with a desire to keep pace with the growth of the city, which was showing a rapid development, it was decided to open still another store, and accordingly in 1912, they established their Victoria Avenue store, a very finely equipped establishment, in which was incorporated the many merchandising ideas that their previous experience had brought to their notice.



W. H. Gillespie is manager of the May Street store; J. R. Gillespie is in charge at Victoria Avenue; F. H. Spence at Simpson and Bethune streets and A. C. White at the Syndicate Avenue store."

Speaking of the development of the business, Mr. W. H. Gillespie is quoted as follows:—"We attribute the success of the Gillespie Drug Stores to the fact that we are in the drug business—first and last. We pay special attention to prescription work, never allowing substitution in dispensing, and this gives our store the name of being reliable. We also impress on our clerks that if they cannot sell our own preparations, of which we have a full line, that they are of no use to us."

Sheriffs Meet.

The annual Convention of the Association of Sheriffs was held in Toronto on Thursday last. A number were present, including the sheriffs from Stratford, Guelph, Hamilton, London, St. Thomas, Orangeville and Brampton. Important business was transacted and interesting addresses were delivered by Dr. Bruce Smith, Inspector of Prisons, and J. W. Mallon, Inspector of Legal Offices. The question of naming a central place for criminal executions and changing from the present use of the gallows to that of the electric chair was discussed and a decision reached to bring the matter before the Government for consideration.

McLaughlin Motor Cars

In considering the purchase of a motor car it is most essential that you consider the motor installed in your car. A most important feature is to satisfy yourself on its fuel economy, ability to get the most miles out of a gallon of gasoline, and smooth and silent running at all times.

Intensely significant, therefore, is the over-head-valve motor, the big feature of McLaughlin-Buick construction. It is an engine that is trustworthy and reliable, and will save you from 15 to 20 per cent. in operating cost.

No other motor ever built has attained the same high standard of durability and consistency the McLaughlin-Buick over-head-valve engine has made an every day occurrence.

After many severe and prolonged road tests which we have put this motor through, we are satisfied that our guarantee to give more power and mileage than any other engine of similar dimensions made anywhere else in the world, is not overdone.

In competition with many of America's best known automobiles, to determine the amount of fuel consumed while travelling under most versatile conditions, the superiority of the over-head-valve motor has been proven times innumerable.

SINCLAIR—CAMPBELL

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Campbell, Erin Township, was the scene of a pretty wedding on Wednesday afternoon, March 18th, when the second daughter, Sadie, became the wife of Mr. David J. Sinclair, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Sinclair, of Ballinafad. Shortly after three o'clock the bride, escorted by her father, entered the drawing room to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played by her sister, Mrs. W. T. Sinclair, who wore the groom's favor, a gold watch fob. The ceremony was performed by Rev. N. Waddell, D.D., of Ballinafad, in the presence of one hundred invited guests. The bride was becomingly gowned in cream peau de cyne, with bodice of brocaded satin, trimmed with pearls, and wore an embroidered veil with coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of roses and lily of the valley, her only ornament being a necklet of pearls, the gift of the groom. Master J. Campbell Sinclair, nephew of the bride, acted as ring-bearer and wore a gift from the groom, a wristlet watch. After congratulations had been received and while the register was being signed, Miss Clara Leslie sang "O Promise Me." A dainty wedding breakfast was served in the dining room, which was tastefully decorated with St. Patrick Day favors. The bride received many beautiful gifts, among them being a quarter-cut oak china cabinet and parlor table, with an address from the members of Melville Church, Caledon, where she was organist and teacher in the Sunday School for the past five years. Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair left on the evening train, the bride wearing a blue tailored suit and hat to match trimmed with Holland blue plumes. They will reside on lot 2, Erin, and will be at home to their friends after May 1st.

CHAS. McDONALD'S DEATH.

McDonald — Dead, at Toronto, on Tuesday, Mar. 17th, 1914, Chas. J. McDonald, aged 76 years.

The deceased, until about ten years ago, resided for about thirty years in this village, where he kept the Queen's Hotel. He was Scotch by birth and came to this country with his parents, when a lad nine years of age, from Inverness, Scotland, the family settling in the township of Esquesing. His wife, who survives him was Helen McNaughton of the same township. Of the family there are living two sons and four daughters—John and Charles, Mrs. Wilson, all of Toronto; Mrs. McClellan, of Erin, and Misses Agnes and Nellie at home. Mr. McDonald was ill about a week, having been taken with a paralytic stroke from which he never recovered. The funeral took place from the C.P.R. station here, on Thursday morning last, the remains being interred in Erin cemetery, his two sons and son-in-law, Mr. Wilson, accompanying the body here. Rev. J. Lindsay, pastor of Burns' church, took charge of the service. The bereaved widow and family have the sympathy of a large circle of friends.—Erin Advocate.

A bailiff went out to levy on the contents of a house. The inventory began in the attic and ended in the cellar. When the dining room was reached, the tally of furniture ran thus:

"One dining room table, oak.
"One set chairs (six), oak.
"One sideboard, oak.
"Two bottles whiskey, full."

Then the word "full" was stricken out and replaced by "empty," and the inventory went on in a hand that straggled and lurched diagonally across the page until it closed with:

"One revolving door-mat."

A farmer returning home late at night saw a light moving about the farmyard. When he investigated he found a neighbor's farmhand carrying a lantern.

"What are you doing here?" demanded the farmer.

"Courtin', sir."

"Courtin'? Courtin' with a lantern? You stupid, I never used a lantern when I went courtin'!"

"No, sir," replied the farmhand as he moved off, "we can all see you didn't."

Bathing and Bellowing.

Primitive man boiled his water with hot stones. That was not the only use he made of them, at any rate, if he was a Scythian. The Scythian practice described by Herodotus has been claimed by some as the first recorded case of smoking. Having spoken of a kind of hemp that grew in the country, Herodotus proceeds: "Now, the Scythians, taking the seed of this hemp, go into their tents and then throw the seed upon the stones heated white hot. As it is thrown on it is burnt into smoke, producing so much that no Greek vapor bath could surpass it. And the Scythians, delighting in it, bellow. This takes the place of washing for them." It seems as though they had discovered the Turkish bath and the cigarette.

MIX MAPS AND MEALS.

An Easy Way of Studying Geography While You Eat.

In the dining room of one family there hang two large colored maps, one of the world, the other of the state in which they live.

The parents and children are forming the habit of talking during meals about what they read or hear, of places and events outside the visible horizon. And whenever any unfamiliar place is mentioned one of the children immediately leaves the table long enough to locate it on the map. "It is near such and such a town or river or mountain," "That is where so and so lives," or "Such a thing happened there," is the information usually added to the first statement.

They do not limit their conversation to bookish things, but speak naturally about whatever they are interested in, turning to the maps as one looks at a railroad guide when traveling, to place themselves. In this way bits of knowledge are linked together, and as sight knowledge requires so much less mental effort than ear knowledge it is more fun.

Besides, the maps, hanging low and in a good light, make a splendid rainy day game for the two younger children, aged eight and ten. The mother, sitting near with her sewing, gives them "hard ones to find" (names of more or less obscurity), and they keep score as to which gets the most "firsts," calling twenty the game.

No wonder the whole world seems like one big picture to this family, and geography but a play.—Woman's Home Companion.

LEAPING FOR THE FIRE NET.

Safe Jumps of Eight or Nine Stories Have Been Made.

At a recent Fifty-sixth street tenement fire in New York that resulted in more of a smoke alarm than a blaze a man and his wife were seen to get out on the ledge of a fifth story window. The firemen told them to wait a moment, that there might be no need to jump. The man cried that they were suffocating and must jump.

The firemen stretched the net and shouted for them to poise themselves properly and jump one at a time. But even while the firemen were shouting the instructions the couple kissed each other, locked arms and leaped. They came down straight and sure as a plummet right into the net. They rebounded about fifteen feet and fell in the net again in a sitting posture, still embraced.

The firemen let them gently down to the sidewalk. They still sat there looking at each other incredulously. Then they were told there was not even a good fire to justify their jump. It had all been smoke from a smouldering lot of rags and other rubbish. The man and wife heard the news with expressions of wonder, thankfulness and condemnation of their silliness.

Jumps of eight and nine stories without injuries have been recorded. The makeup of the jumper is what counts. The firemen have to be prepared for all kinds. Sometimes they have to shift a few inches quickly because of the bad judgment of distance shown by the jumper. But in most cases the leap to the net saves life.—New York Sun.

A Little Paint Badly Applied.

The play "L'Homme de Destin" was taken from the stage when its triumph was at the zenith. One evening Napoleon, accompanied by his friend Duroc, went in disguise to the Porte St. Martin theater, where the piece was being performed. Eugene Chevalier appearing as the man of destiny. They bought a box, but had hardly entered it when the emperor broke forth in violent execrations against the "fool managers." It seemed that the decorators had left in the box pots of oil and paint, and into these the emperor had stepped. Wild with rage, he rushed from the house and to make matters worse was recognized in the lobby. No paper mentioned the incident, but by order of the emperor the play was never produced again, and Chevalier never appeared again as the man of destiny—and all on account of a little paint badly applied.

Theory and Practice.

Little Beatrice was taking piano lessons and learning at the same time something of theory. Like many other children, she disliked practicing her finger exercises. One day her mother, who was working in an upstairs room, noticed a sudden lull in the playing. She looked down and saw Beatrice sitting perfectly motionless.

"Beatrice, why don't you practice?" she called down sharply.

"I am practicing, mother," replied the child with perfect self assurance. "I'm practicing my theory."—New York Post.

Parliament and Congress.

The British parliament and the United States congress have many points of difference. The parliament is practically omnipotent, while the congress is subject not only to the provisions of the constitution, but to the president's veto. Congress represents the people, while parliament to all intents and purposes is the people.—New York American.

Thoughtless.

"I offered Chollie a penny for his thoughts."

"Did you get them?"

"No, he was out of thoughts as usual."—Boston Transcript.

MAGISTRATE SPEAKS FOR ZAM-BUK

Magistrate Perry, of Goldfields, B.C., believes in making a good thing known. Writing of Zam-Buk, the great household balm, he says:—"After a very fair trial I have proved Zam-Buk eminently satisfactory. In my case it cured a skin rash of five years' standing which no doctor had been able to do any good for. I would certainly encourage any person to keep Zam-Buk in his home." The magistrate is quite right. Every home needs Zam-Buk! Unequalled for cuts, burns, bruises, eczema, blood poisoning and all skin diseases. All stores and druggists sell it at 50 cents a box. Sure cure for piles.

DON'T NEGLECT THAT SORE!

A Chicago man has just died from blood poisoning arising from neglect of a small sore. Don't neglect a cut, a patch of eczema, or an open sore of any kind. The air is full of poison germs, waiting to start up their evil results in neglected sores, wounds, etc. In Zam-Buk is safety. Zam-Buk is so highly antiseptic that applied to any skin disease or injury it makes blood poisoning impossible. In using Zam-Buk you have three processes going on at once for Zam-Buk is healing, soothing and antiseptic. Try it without delay.

A GENUINE OFFER.

TEST ZAM-BUK AT OUR EXPENSE!

We appreciate the position taken by the man or woman who says:—"If your preparation is what you claim, you should have no objection to letting us try it before spending our money on it." To every person taking this view we say, send one cent stamp (to pay return postage) and name and date of this paper to Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, and we will mail you a free trial box of Zam-Buk. Zam-Buk is purely herbal, suitable for the delicate skin of little children, yet powerful enough to heal chronic sores of long years' standing. All druggists and stores, 50c. per box, 3 for $1.25.

THE BANNER

THE BANNER, APRIL 9th, 1914.

THE 36th REGIMENT

The Town Council's protest against the proposal to transfer the headquarters of the 36th Regiment to Toronto will meet with the hearty endorsation of the great majority of our citizens. The 36th has an honorable record extending back almost fifty years.. Peel and Dufferin counties have contributed liberally in men and money toward the support of the regiment. In recent years it has been one of the best rural regiments at the Niagara Camp, It has gone to camp nearer full strength than most of the country regiments. The agitation for the transfer is due entirely to the city officers of the Regiment, whose convenience would be suited by the organization of a purely city regiment. If the scheme these officers have hatched goes through it simply means that Dufferin will either be without militia or else the local companies will be attached to Regiments officered and controlled in neighboring counties. It also means the loss of the fine regimental band maintained at Shelburne. The situation calls for strong and concerted action by all who are interested in the preservation of the old and historic 36th. If the city officers of the Regiment are not satisfied with matters as they stand at present let them step out and make room for local men, whose interest would lie in continuing the Regiment as it is now constituted.

Hydro-Radial Notes

Speaking of the benefits that electric railways will bring, Hon. Adam Beck is quoted as stating in a recent speech that "The radial scheme was most important. It would make life on the farm more satisfactory, giving them cheap and efficient transportation, placing them in a position to enjoy more leisure by the introduction of power to the needs of the farm and would help to reduce the cost of living to the consumer. It would relieve cities of the slums and would make life worth the living."

The Owen Sound Times says that a gang of eight surveyors are at work in the vicinity of Bognor. This party, The Times says, ran a survey from Flesherton to Bognor. At the latter point the line branches off, one survey running to Meaford and the other to Owen Sound. Locating Engineer Buck, who is in charge of the survey party, is quoted as stating that he expects all the work of estimating on the cost of the road and all the data which the Hydro-Electric Commission will consider it essential to procure will have been completed by the first of June.

A meeting of West Caledon and North Erin residents was held in the school house of S. S. No. 13, Caledon, on Friday evening in the interests of the proposed hydro-electric railway between Guelph and Orangeville. There was a good attendance and a lively interest was evinced in the proposed railway. Mr. Dougal Reid, of North Erin, occupied the chair and Mr. Joseph Carroll acted as secretary. Mr. Wm. Walwin and Councillor S. Kannawin gave concise reports of the proceedings at the big meeting in Orangeville and also spoke of the benefits that an electric railway would bring the farmers. Short speeches were also made by a number of those present. A committee was afterwards formed as follows :—Wm. Walwin, chairman ; S. Kannawin, secretary ; James Hilliard, Dougal Reid and Jos. Carroll.

The construction of a hydro-electric railway from Guelph to Alliston by way of Orangeville would serve a large district that is now practically without railways. While part of Erin township is tapped by the Credit Valley branch of the C.P.R., there is a large area of country between Erin, Hillsburg and Guelph that is not within easy reach of any railway line. The same condition exists in the country east and northeast of Orangeville. The people of Mono and west Adjala have no railways nearer than the C.P.R. at Orangeville or the G.T.R. at Alliston, Beeton or Tottenham. When they have produce to sell they have to drive many miles before they can reach the nearest railway point. An electric railway is particularly suitable to the needs of the district, because electric cars will stop anywhere on the road to pick up passengers and take on freight, where the steam roads only make stops at their regular stations several miles apart. The road would undoubtedly prove a great benefit to Orangeville, but it would be equally beneficial to the farmers of the townships through which it would run.

Mayor Island and Mr. R. B. Henry represented the Orangeville Branch of the Hydro-Radial Union on the large deputation which appeared before the Ontario Cabinet on Wednesday of last week to urge the extension of the scope of the campaign for hydro-electric radial railways in Ontario. The deputation, which was introduced by Hon. Adam Beck, urged the Government to take immediate steps to have the scheme fully organized and construction work commenced. A memorial, which the deputation submitted, asked the Government to legalize a model agreement authorizing the Hydro-Electric Commission and the municipalities to contract for the construction and operation of radial railways, to pass legislation guaranteeing any bonds that may be issued, and to authorize the issue of such bonds for a period of fifty years, without any sinking fund obligation for the first ten years in order that any railway that may be constructed may start operations under the most favorable conditions.

The Orangeville Branch of the Hydro-Electric Railway Union held its first meeting on Thursday night. Arrangements were made to have a deputation appear before the Town Council on Monday night to ask that body to pass a resolution asking for a survey and estimates on a line of railway from Guelph to Orangeville and from this town to Alliston. Steps were also taken to enlist the interest and active assistance of neighboring municipalities which stand to benefit by the construction of the road.

DUFFERINS REORGANIZE

Will Place Juvenile and Junior Teams In O. A. L. A. This Season.

A well attended meeting was held in Dr. Campbell's office on Monday night for the purpose of reorganizing the Dufferin Lacrosse Club for the coming season. After the good season last year it was only to be expected that the meeting would be enthusiastic over the prospects for the coming season. The many amendments coming before the O.A.L.A. Convention on Good Friday were discussed. The meeting placed itself on record as being opposed to allowing Canadian teams to play in the United States on Sundays. The meeting was also unfavorable to abolishing the age limit in the Junior series as has been suggested. The amendment, whereby it is proposed to allow substitutes to play in a match when any of the regular players are ruled off, was fully discussed. It seemed to be the general opinion that if the teams were reduced to ten men it would be a good idea to allow each team in a match two substitutes in order that the number of players would not be too greatly reduced at any time.

It was decided to place Junior and Juvenile teams in the O.A.L.A. The matter of an intermediate team was left in abeyance pending further developments. The meeting strongly endorsed Mr. A. A. Smith as a candidate for the O.A.L.A. council. A committee consisting of H. Keith, J. Dawson, Dalt Patterson and Earl Stevenson was appointed to collect funds. The same method will be adopted as last year, namely, that of asking each contributor for 50 cents and no more.

The Treasurer's accounts for the past year were audited. The auditors reported a balance of $6.05 to the credit of the Club.

The following officers were elected:
Hon.-Presidents—C. R. McKeown, M.P.P., Dr. G. H. Campbell and Mr. B. McGuire.
President—Mr. R. H. Neilson.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mr. D. McCallum.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mr. C. V. Jeffers.
Secretary and Press Agent—Mr. A. A. Smith.
Treasurer—Earl Stevenson.
Manager—H. Keith.
Assistant Managers—Dalt. Patterson and Jas. Dawson.

Division Court.

Judge Fisher held Division Court on Tuesday. Several cases were tried, the following being the more important :—

Hodgson vs. Duke—Geo. Hodgson, an Amaranth farmer, sued Geo. H. Duke, of Mono Mills, for $7.35, representing a balance claimed on the price of a load of hogs which he had sold the defendant. Duke bought the hogs for $9.25 delivered at Caledon East. Plaintiff alleged a further agreement that if hogs were over $9 per cwt. in Orangeville on the day of delivery he was to receive 25c over the Orangeville price to compensate him for delivery. It happened that on the day he delivered the load the Orangeville price was $9.25. Duke paid Hodgson $9.25 for the load, but disclaimed any liability for the extra 25c. Plaintiff got judgment for $7.35, but as there had evidently been a misunderstanding between the men, His Honour declined to allow Hodgson any costs. Geo. Robb for plff.; A. A. Hughson for deft.

McLean vs. Torrance—Arthur McLean, a local painter, sued Geo. Torrance, First St., for $3.70 for some papering, painting and varnishing. Defendant disputed the account, holding that 13 single rolls of paper would suffice for the work ordered. McLean swore that he used 11 double rolls. The case was adjourned and a valuator was appointed to measure the room and report at next Court. D. J. Hatcher was selected to make the report. Geo. Robb for plff.; A. A. Hughson for deft.

O'Flynn vs. Ladd—S. F. M. O'Flynn & Son, of Shelburne, sued George and Percy Ladd, of Mono, and Jas. A. Matthews, Orangeville, under a garnishee summons. The evidence showed that before he was served with the garnishee, Matthews had accepted and paid an order made by the Ladd brothers in favor of D. B. Brown. The defendants, it should be explained, had sold Matthews a quantity of lumber, which accounts for his connection with the suit. Judgment was given against the primary debtors for the full amount claimed and costs. As regards Matthews, the action was dismissed.

W. M. Green obtained judgment against Thos. A. White and Ernest Denny, garnishee, for an account of $179.69 with costs.

THE TOWN COUNCIL.

Resolution Passed Asking for Survey of Guelph to Orangeville Electric Railway.

Opposition to Transfer of Headquarters of 36th Regiment to Toronto.

The Town Council held a lengthy meeting on Monday night. All the members were in attendance.

The Clerk was given authority to issue orders for the following accounts :—A. A. Hughson, local option costs, $20 ; A. A. Hughson, law costs, $57.95 ; R. J. Bennett, $1 ; T. J. Brown, 60c ; O. Harmon, 60c; American Road Machine Co. of Canada, $37 ; White & White, $1.05 ; Pine River Light & Power Co., $138.53, passed at $134.40 ; Bell Telephone Co., $16.25 ; John Busby, $1 ; Wm. Marshall, 50c ; C. C. G. Hannah, $17.20 ; Isaac Hughson, $5 ; Lathwell & Son, $28.51 ; W. O. Thomas, $3.06 ; Thos. Campbell, $3.91 ; S. Street, $1.19.

The Pine River Power Co's account of $75 for power for the electric pump was referred to the F. & W. Committee for report at next meeting.

Alan R. Goodeve's application for rebate of rates for water for the open air skating rink on Idylwyld Park was referred to the F. & W. Committee for report.

A. A. Hughson submitted a statement of taxes returned as being uncollected.

Gillespie Bros. application for permission to construct an underground gasoline tank in front of their store was referred to the Town Property and Streets Committees for report.

According to a statement from the Sterling Bank the town's account was overdrawn to the extent of $2028.56 on March 31st.

Through its secretary, Mr. A. E. Annis, the Orangeville Branch of the Ontario Hydro-Railway Union asked the Council to pass a resolution requesting the Commission to make a survey and prepare estimates of the cost of an electric railway running from Guelph to Orangeville and from Orangeville to Alliston.

Messrs. D. B. Brown, Dr. G. H. Campbell, R. B. Henry and A. E. Annis addressed the Council on the subject of the proposed railway. After hearing the deputation Council went into Committee of the Whole to discuss the matter. After considerable discussion relative to the proposed route and the merits and demerits of the scheme, Reeve White and Coun. Johnston moved :—

"That the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario be requested on behalf of the Municipal Council of Orangeville to inquire into, examine, investigate and report upon the cost of constructing and operating an Electric Railway from Guelph to Orangeville and Orangeville to Alliston ; the municipalities, the inhabitants of which will be served by such Railway ; the population of each of such municipalities as shown by the last enumeration thereof by the assessors ; an estimate of the probable revenue from the Railway and the practicability of the undertaking and the economic value to the localities to be served by it as provided for in section 3 of the Hydro-Electric Act, 1913."

The Clerk was instructed to forward a copy of the resolution to Hon. Adam Beck. Copies will also be forwarded to the Clerks of Caledon, Mono, Adjala, Tossorontio, Alliston, Erin, Erin Village, East Garafraxa and Amaranth with a request that these municipalities pass similar resolutions and forward them to the Hydro-Electric Commission.

Mr. H. A. Dorrance, an officer of the Shelburne Company of the 36th Regiment, addressed the Council in opposition to the proposal to remove the headquarters of the Regiment to Toronto. After hearing Mr. Dorrance the Council instructed the Clerk to write to John Best M. P. for Dufferin, stating that it strongly objected to the proposed transfer and requesting Mr. Best to interview the Minister of Militia, inform him of the objections to the change and urge him not to take any action in the matter.

The roof of the Opera House is leaking rather badly in several places and the Clerk was instructed to write Harry May, the contractor, informing him of the fact and requesting him to complete his contract within ten days from the date of the letter. If this is not done the Council will put on a man to complete the job and charge May with the cost of the work. The Council still retains $100 of May's contract money as surety for the satisfactory completion of the work.

SUFFERED EVERYTHING

For Years, Restored To Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Canadian women are continually writing us such letters as the two following, which are heartfelt expressions of gratitude for restored health:

Glanford Station, Ont.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and never found any medicine to compare with it. I had ulcers and falling of womb and doctors did me no good. I suffered dreadfully for years until I began taking your medicine. I also recommend it for nervousness and indigestion." — Mrs. HENRY CLARK, Glanford Station, Ont.

Chesterville, Ont. — "I heard your medicines highly praised, and a year ago I began taking them for falling of womb and ovarian trouble.

"My left side pained me all the time and just before my periods which were irregular and painful it would be worse. To sit down caused me pain and suffering and I would be so nervous sometimes that I could not bear to see any one or hear any one speak. Little specks would float before my eyes and I was always constipated.

"I cannot say too much for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, for there are no medicines like them. I have taken them and I recommend them to all women. You may publish this testimonial." — Mrs. STEPHEN J. MARTIN, Chesterville, Ontario, Canada.

LAUREL.

Mr. George Curry and mother, of Brampton, have moved into the house lately occupied by Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Cooney.

We hear that there will be a musical concert in our village some evening in the near future.

As the hockey season is past, we will have to organize either a baseball or lacrosse club, so that Laurel may be heard from in the sporting columns in future.

Miss Phyllis Maltby, of Shelburne, visited under the parental roof over Sunday.

Mr. Harry Cooney was visiting in the Queen City the latter end of last week.

We thought the G.O.R.A.B. was dead but by reports in last week's Banner it is still alive.

What we would like to know:—

Where J. M. and L. B. were last Friday evening?

Who Lou drives a team of late?

CALEDON.

(Too late for last week.)

Messrs. John Ferguson and Wilmer Hillock each loaded a car of settlers' effects on Tuesday and put out for the golden West. Quite a crowd gathered at the station to say "au revoir" and wish them success in their new venture.

The Caledon Dramatic Club journeyed to Alton on Friday evening and presented their ever popular play "The Old New Hampshire Home," to a crowded house. The Alton orchestra furnished sweet music between the acts and everything passed off perfectly.

Miss Maggie Nesbitt and Mrs. John Warnock returned home on Friday after a short visit with friends in Elora.

Mr. H. S. Murray, of West Toronto, visited Caledon friends last week.

The Caledon Branch of the Peel Women's Institute held a very successful basket social on Thursday evening. Master Fraser Warnock won the prize for gentlemen, while Miss Stella Limebeer was awarded the ladies prize.

Miss Hazel Stubbs accompanied the Dramatic Club to Alton and ably assisted the orchestra of that place in furnishing suitable music for the entertainment on Friday evening.

The barn on the farm of Mr. R. A. Stubbs, lot 20, 3rd con., west, Caledon, was burned to the ground on Saturday night, together with a horse belonging to Mr. Wm. Hillock and a cow and a number of hens owned by Mr. Thos. Hillock. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Miss Edna Quinn, who is undergoing treatment in Toronto General Hospital, is reported as making satisfactory progress toward recovery.

Mr. Daniel McArthur, bailiff of the 3rd division court of the County of Peel, is now a resident of this place, having moved into Miss Lamont's home last week. Welcome to town.

Miss Maude Scarland, who has been attending Toronto Normal School, is home for the Easter vacation.

Mr. Wm. Sanderson, who has a homestead in Saskatchewan, left on Tuesday to take up his duties there. We wish him success.

Saps runnin'! and maple syrup making is the order of the day.

Mr. Wm. Trathan has moved to his new farm, lot 15, 2nd line, east, where it is expected the registered stock will do even better than in former places.

The Caledon Library Board is contemplating the erection of a building that will serve their needs. Mr. Geo. Laughlin has generously donated a site and some good subscriptions have been promised. More later!

STAR.

Moving has been the order of the day for the past few days, Dan McArthur has moved to Charleston, where he will reside in future. Ed. Carey has moved to the McArthur farm. We are pleased that Ed. will still be in the neighborhood.

Mr. George Baxter has purchased a valuable mare in West Caledon. Georgie still has a fancy for good horses.

Miss Irene McArthur is spending a few days with friends in Toronto.

Mr. Farquhar Baxter intends veneering his new house with brick. Work will commence as soon as possible and when completed the house will be one of the finest in Caledon.

Hector McLeish, of the Horse Shoe, is doing a rushing business cording wood. Hector is up-to-date in this line.

Duncan McArthur has a large number of trees tapped. As he is a new beginner and sap scarce he is beginning to wonder if he has tapped the right kind of tree.

Mrs. J. J. Glassford, of the 2nd line, and Dan McArthur are erecting new barns on their farms this summer. Mr. Still, of Mono, has the contract for each. There will be a big improvement on the 2nd line.

Wilmer Hillock and John Ferguson left on Tuesday last for the West with two carloads of settlers' effects. A large number of friends and neighbors gathered at the station to bid them good-bye.

CALEDON.

The Caledon Branch of the Peel Women's Institute held a Crokinole social in the Town Hall on Thursday evening, March 26th. Although the evening was unfavorable, the company was sufficient to comfortably fill the hall and provide players for all available tables. The evening was spent in progressive crokinole and an Educative Contest, which was won by Mrs. D. McKim and Mr. Garfield Faulkner. Mr. Fraser Warnock played the best crokinole game with Miss Limebeer's help. After lunch the Caledon quartette favored the company with several selections. The proceeds of the evening were $13, which will be used in fixing up the neglected plots in Caledon cemetery.

MONO MILLS.

It is our sad duty this week to report the death of a highly respected resident of this district in the person of Miss Bridget Ellen Garvey, who passed away at her home on lot 6, con. 7, east, Mono, on Friday evening after three days' illness from pneumonia. The insidious malady developed very rapidly and the best medical skill was powerless to check its progress. The late Miss Garvey was a daughter of the late Owen Garvey, one of the fine, old pioneers of Mono. She was born on lot 6, con. 7, and had lived there all her life. A woman of even temper and sunny ways and possessed of a kindly, obliging disposition she had many warm friends. She was a good neighbor and her many kindly acts will long be remembered in the community. The funeral took place to the family plot in the Forest Lawn Cemetery, Orangeville, on Monday morning. The remains were first taken to St. Peter's Church, where a requiem mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Egan. The church was crowded with friends and neighbors of the deceased. Father Egan preached an impressive sermon, pointing out the necessity of every person being ready to answer the summons, which comes sooner or later to everyone. The life led by the deceased was such that she was prepared when the summons came. Father Egan conducted the final service at the grave. The pallbearers were Messrs. James Harrigan, W. A. Donaldson, Joseph Haffey, James Henry, John Flaherty and Daniel Sullivan. Two brothers, James and Patrick, and three sisters, Misses Kate, of Orangeville, and Margaret at home, and Mrs. M. Flaherty, of Binkham, are left to mourn her death. They have the sincere sympathy of the community in their time of sorrow.

On Monday night of last week some of the young men of the neighborhood paid an unannounced visit to Mr. Wellington Darraugh's bush and had what they considered a fine nights fun boiling down the 3 barrels of sap which Mr. and Mrs. Darraugh had collected the preceding Saturday. It didn't look quite so funny when one of their number received a letter from Mr. Darraugh inviting them to settle and threatening legal proceedings if they failed to come across with the money. They were glad to get out of the affair by paying $10 for the loss and damage they had caused. We are greatly tempted to give the readers of The Banner the names of the bunch, but they have had a pretty stiff lesson already and it may be as well not to further harras their feelings at the present time. Most of them probably realize by this time that instead of having a night of innocent fun, they were guilty of a mean and despicable trick on a respected neighbor. Fun is alright, but boys should never forget that manliness is a matter of much greater moment.

CALEDON.

Mrs. E. Vogan is away for a few days visiting her daughter, Mrs. Perdue, of Toronto.

Maple syrup is very scarce. The little that is to be had is bringing $1.50 a gallon.

The announcement of 8 o'clock closing for the Caledon Departmental Store will probably increase the demand for fast roadsters.

Our community has lost one of its old and greatly respected residents in the person of Mr. Thomas McCort, who passed away about one o'clock last Saturday morning after a lingering illness. Deceased was about 70 years of age and is survived by a widow and a grown up family. He was a Conservative with independent leanings, an enthusiastic Orangeman and a member of the A. O. U. W. The genuine respect in which he was held was shown by the unusually large attendance at the funeral, which took place to Charleston cemetery on Monday afternoon. Owing to the size of the concourse which assembled at the home it was found necessary to hold the funeral service in Knox Presbyterian Church, with which the late Mr. McCort had long been identified. The service, which was of a very impressive character, was conducted by Rev Stanley Robinson, of Maple, a former pastor of Knox Church, assisted by Rev. Jenkins Burkholder, the present pastor. The pallbearers were Messrs. J. J. Nesbitt, James Clark, Jos. Ferguson, Irvine Dodds, Alex. McCort and ———— In addition to the members of the family and immediate relatives, Mr. W. J. Dodds, Mrs. W. J. McCoy, Mrs. Robt. McFarlane, Toronto, and Mr. Alex. McCort, formerly clerk of Albion, were among the friends present from a distance.

ALTON

A. E. Lake's bakeshop was completely destroyed by fire early on Monday morning. The blaze, which is supposed to have originated from a furnace, was discovered about four o'clock. The fire alarm brought the startled villagers to the scene in short order and a bucket brigade was soon hard at work making a stern fight to save adjoining buildings. Rowcliffe's blacksmith shop, which was only separated from the doomed building by a narrow alley, was in the greatest danger. The windows in the west end of the shop were burned out and the roof caught fire several times, but the brave fire fighters managed to extinguish the flames, thereby preventing what might have developed into a disastrous conflagration. The Barber Carriage Co's. large factory immediately east of Rowcliffe's was also in grave danger, but men stationed on the roof with pails of water kept a close watch upon the falling sparks until the fire had burned down. Much sympathy is felt for Mr. Lake, who estimates his loss at over $1200 with only $800 insurance. Besides running the bakery he carried a stock of confectionery and groceries. The walls of the building collapsed from the intense heat and only the bake oven and one corner of the outer wall remain standing. The building was owned by Mr. J. M. Dods.

Mr. E. D. Barber, of the Barber Carriage Co., is confined to the house this week with a badly sprained wrist and ankle due to a fall from the roof of Rowcliffe's shop while fighting the fire last Monday morning.

Mr. C. D. Gordon, manager of the Dominion Bank, Brampton, delivered an excellent address to a large congregation in the Presbyterian church last Sunday morning. In the evening Rev. W. E. Norton, County Inspector for the Children's Aid Society, addressed a crowded church on the work of the Society. The congregation was a union one, the Methodists having withdrawn their service for the occasion.

On Sunday afternoon Mr. Todd conducted a union service for children in the Presbyterian Church. The service was well attended and very helpful.

Mr. Robt. Clark went to the city on Tuesday to attend the funeral of his cousin, Miss Kezia Clark, who died in New York on Saturday. The funeral was held from the residence of her brother, Dr. W. J. Clark, 867 College St., on Tuesday afternoon.

The Late Robert McCutcheon

The Angel of Death visited a Caledon home early on Friday morning, March 27th, and called to his eternal rest the head of the family in the person of Robert McCutcheon, lot 21, 4th line, west. The late Mr. McCutcheon was the only son of Mr. Robert McCutcheon, lot 6, 7th line, east, Mono, who died on March 27th, 1909, therefore predeceasing his son by only five years. He was in his 60th year and up to a few months prior to his death, when he was stricken with paralysis, had enjoyed very good health. During his illness he bore his sufferings with patience and Christian fortitude and always had a kind and loving word for those who waited upon him. In politics the late Mr. McCutcheon was a staunch Conservative and for a number of years took a deep interest in the municipal affairs of the township of Mono, serving both as councillor and deputy-reeve of the municipality. In religion he was a strong Presbyterian. He was also an enthusiastic Orangeman and a member of the Royal Black Knights of Ireland. On Sunday following his death, the remains were taken from his late home at Alton to the old farm, lot 6, 7th line, Mono, where he had spent his childhood and also his manhood days until five years ago, when he moved to the farm near Alton, leaving his son, James, on the homestead. The funeral, which was largely attended took place to Mono East cemetery on Monday afternoon, March 30th. The services, which were held in the Presbyterian Church, were conducted by Rev. Dr. Armstrong, of Alton, and Rev. J. A. Black, of Mono Mills. The burial service of the Orange Order was read over the open grave by Bros. W. G. Duke, W.M., and Thos. McCandless, chaplain, of Mono Mills L.O.L. No. 192. The impressive service of the Royal Black Knights was read by Sir Knight H. A. Duke, of Orangeville. The pallbearers were Messrs. Wm. Cobean, R. J. Mills, R. J. Halbert, W. G. Duke, Enoch Snell and Thos. McCandless. The deceased leaves to mourn his loss a grown-up family of four sons and three daughters. The latter are Robert M., of Foam Lake, Sask.; John M., of Durham; James N., on the old farm in Mono; Isabel and William V., at home; Elizabeth, of Ramdwick, and Ethel, of Penetanguishene. The sorrowing ones have the sympathy of the community in their sad bereavement.

Mrs. John Anderson

Mrs. Christina Anderson, a sister-in-law of Mr. Chas. Anderson, Zina St., died at the home of Township Clerk W. A. Henry near Mono Centre about 4 o'clock Monday morning. Mrs. Anderson came to visit Mrs. Henry, who is her niece, about nine months ago and was taken ill a short time afterwards. Her death was the result of a general breakdown due to advancing years. She was 77 years of age and was the widow of the late John Anderson, of Dundalk. She was a woman, who was greatly esteemed and her demise will be keenly regretted by many old and tried friends. Rev. A. J. Fowlie held a short service at Mr. Henry's home on Monday evening. The remains were taken to Dundalk for interment, the funeral being held on Tuesday afternoon. Rev. A. J. Fowlie and Rev. Geo. Kendall conducted the funeral service in the Presbyterian church. A number of friends were present from a distance, some of them being Mrs. D. Keith from Michigan; Mrs. Sharpe, Georgetown; Mr. John McArthur, Egremont; Mr. Tough, Grand Valley, an old school comrade, and Mr. Edgar Roy, Toronto, a nephew.

GENIUS AND A CLUB.

Contemporary Criticism as an Unfair and Merciless Weapon.

The world has never seen an age in which there was more excuse for questioning the validity of contemporary judgment. It would be the height of folly to expect posterity to authenticate the vaporings of an appreciation which in shifting its stress from the universal to the personnel has changed from criticism into colloquy, from climatic into causerie. Indeed, it is nothing less than a truism that the experience of the artist in all ages, according to the verdict of history, is identical with itself.

In the words of Sidney Lanier, "The artist shall put forth humbly and lovingly the very best and highest that is within him, utterly regardless of contemporary criticism. What possible claim can contemporary criticism set up to respect—that criticism which stoned Stephen, hooted Paul for a madman, bound Columbus in chains, drove Dante into exile, made Shakespeare write the sonnet 'When In Disgrace With Fortune and Men's Eyes,' gave Milton £5 for 'Paradise Lost,' kept Samuel Johnson cooling his heels on Lord Chesterfield's doorstep, reviled Shelley as an unclean dog, killed Keats, cracked jokes on Gluck, Schubert, Beethoven, Berlioz and Wagner and committed so many other impious follies and stupidities that a thousand letters like this could not suffice even to catalogue them?"

The verdict of the "intellectuels" has always been a veritable stumbling block in the path of genius.

"If is from men of established literary reputation," asserts Bernard Shaw, "that we learn that William Blake was mad, that Shelley was spoiled by living in a low set, that Robert Owen was a man who did not know the world, that Ruskin is incapable of comprehending political economy, that Zola is a mere blackguard and Ibsen is Zola with a wooden leg. The great musician accepted by his unskilled listener is vilified by his fellow musician. It was the musical culture of Europe which pronounced Wagner the inferior of Mendelssohn and Meyerbeer."

It is not enough to say with the brilliant author of "Contemporaries" that contemporary criticism is mere conversation; it is often little more than mere gossip. One is often inclined to question with Lowell whether the powers that be in criticism are really the powers that ought to be.—From Archibald Henderson's "European Dramatists."

Easily Explained.

"I wonder what is the matter with me?" he said. "I have a feeling of depression and I can't throw it off, no matter how I try."

"I know what is the matter," his wife replied. "You have an engagement with the dentist at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, you know."

Almost Driven Insane by Overstrained Nerves and Sleepless Nights

Feared Paralysis

Mr. F. A. Krutz, Schwartz, Que., writes—"For about one year before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was a complete nervous wreck. Could not rest or sleep, was irritable and easily excited and had indigestion and dreadful headaches. My nerves were continually on edge, and I feared prostration or paralysis.

After the first three boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I felt greatly improved and six boxes made me entirely well and strong. There is no treatment equal to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a means of building up the nervous system."

Nerves so Exhausted could not Sleep

Mr. Dennis Mackin, Maxton, Sask., writes—"I have just finished using the sixth box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and I must say that when I commenced using it my nerves were so bad that I could scarcely get any sleep. I would lie in bed nearly all night without sleep, and one who has this trouble knows the misery of sleepless nights. The Nerve Food helped me from the start, and has built up my nervous system wonderfully. I now enjoy good, sound sleep, and instead of feeling tired in the mornings I am strong and healthy and well fitted for my daily work."

After using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for a few days you will find yourself less irritable and excitable, sleep will return to restore your nervous system as nothing else can, and you will be started on the way to complete recovery.

The amount due from the Government on Good Roads is $25,902.

Acting on the advice of the county solicitor a committee composed of Messrs. Beatty Quinn, McCabe and Leavens reported that no action be taken.

Two or three small bridges will be erected on the north townline between Albion and Simcoe, and a concrete bridge will be built on the Bolton-Albion line at Glasgow Mills.

The report stated that in pursuance of a petition of John McCauley and one hundred and fifty other ratepayers of the township of Toronto, asking for a subway at the Centre Road crossing at Cooksville, that the matter had been brought to the attention of the Railway Board, but no decision had yet been reached. The claim of Thos. McCartney for injuries sustained on Dundas Street was settled for $200. The claim of G. W. Gordon, Port Credit, balance of account Lake Shore Road, was settled for $198.

The condition of the subway at Cedar Mills in the township of Albion was also investigated by the committee and the engineer and also the engineers of the C.P.R. and of the Railway Board, but no action has yet been taken by the Railway Board or by the railway companies.

The railway will be asked to fix things so as to give the overhead clearance required by law.

Steps will be taken to secure some protection, other than a subway, at the G.T.R. crossing at No. 25, Albion.—Bolton Enterprise.

THE MONO'S RECORD

Old Railroaders Still Talk of Great Run Over the Old Narrow Guage

There is no official report of it among the roadhouse papers of the old Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway, but it is said that the little English-built, bell top Mono made the fastest trip recorded or unrecorded between Toronto and Owen Sound.

No engine driver alive to-day would ever attempt to cover the distance—122 miles—in less than three hours with one of the heavy locomotives now used on the line. If he did attempt it, he and his engine would probably throw themselves from one of the curves on this line of extraordinary curvature into the ditch. But the Mono, with her little driving wheels, gripped the old narrow guage, tore up and down the grades and "took" the curves, and made a journey that the older railroad men of Ontario talk about to this day.

Now, this story is probably true. I think it is because an old T., G. and B. man told it, and I am going to repeat, party in his own words, what he says happened on that record smashing run.

"It was in August, 1876," said the old driver, as he shoved his cap back, and scratched his head, reminiscently, "that the superintendent came hurrying over to the roundhouse and said, 'Davy, we've got to get these freight records through to Owen Sound by four o'clock. The Africa (I think that was the vessel he named) sails at four and she has got to have these papers, or there is going to be a mixup that the freight department can't straighten out in a century.'"

"'All right, sir,' said Davy. 'I'm wooded up and she's carrying 180. If I can get through to Shelburne without wooding-up we'll make it.'"

In the picturesque language of the "road" the old engineer went on to tell how David climbed into the cab, caught the bundle of manifests tossed to him by the superintendent, opened the throttle, and started the greatest race against time in the history of the division. Little by little the engineer opened the throttle wider, and with each motion the Mono leaped ahead with a new speed impulse. As she tore across the fields and through the forest cuttings, the engine rocked from side to side, threatening every second to throw herself from the forty-pound rails. The engineer's face became tense and white as he fixed his eyes on the track ahead. Farmers stood in the fields and gazed in open-mouthed amazement, for the locomotive and its driver looked like wild things bent on self destruction. Near Woodbridge the Mono dashed over the high wooden trestle with a clang and a rumble of metal that could be heard for miles. Like a dart she sped to the foot of Caledon mountain, and commenced her labored climb up the grade. Gathering speed, and with exhaust spitting fitfully, she hit the horseshoe curve and, as the old engineer said quaintly, "Went around it on two wheels." The run down the slope to Caledon and Orangeville was daring beyond credence. It was the supreme test of courage for a locomotive driver with a duty to perform. The snapping of a piston rod or the loosening of a bolt meant destruction and death. The driver had supreme confidence in the Mono, and as for himself he never gave a thought. North of Orangeville another nasty grade was climbed, but the engine was steaming splendidly, and she pulled up to the woodpile at Shelburne on time. A dozen men were waiting to load the tender with selected, well-dried maple. David, the engineer, and the fireman climbed back into the cab, and waved goodbye. The cheers that came back to them were scarcely audible, because of the noise of the exhaust.

The Mono was under way again. David glanced at his watch. It was 2.30 p.m., but the worst part of the road had been covered. He had ninety minutes to make sixty miles and he believed he could do it. The fireman, stripped to the waist, was wet with perspiration, but his eyes danced with the spirit of the race. Rail fences, poles, and patches of forest flashed by, and some of the curves were swung with a momentum that almost threw the driver from his seat. Men and women, working in the fields, waved their hands and shouted. Cattle and horses, with animal terror in their eyes, ran fast to escape the mysterious monster. At last the engine rose over the crest of the long, straight down grade run through Markdale. The station agent shoved back some people who had gathered on the platform, just in time, for the Mono hurled herself through the place, some people declare, at 70 miles an hour. The suction might have drawn the people on the platform under the wheels. Holland Centre and Chatsworth, little hamlets in 1876, were passed so quickly that only the clatter of the switch points indicated the astonishing progress. The engineer glanced at his watch as St. Vincent crossing flicked past. The time was 3.40., and he had twenty minutes to cover less than five miles.

Since that day no locomotive has sped down the grade at Murray's Cut with such reckless speed. Even the engineer began to feel the thrill of uncertainty. Could he stop the engine before she reached the end of the steel? Four hundred yards ahead was Boyd's wharf and a hundred yards beyond that was the end of the line. Slowly David shoved over the throttle. With the instinct of the trained engineer, he was conscious of a slight response, and it gave him confidence. Again the throttle moved and again speed slackened. Then he threw "her" right over. The fireman rang the bell vigorously and great clouds of escaping steam almost enveloped the Mono as she came to a standstill at her destination, with a record that may never again be equalled on the division. The engineer looked at his watch. It was 3.48 p.m., and the distance—122 miles—had been covered in two hours and forty-eight minutes. Out at the end of the wharf the steamer Africa was waiting. The purser with a bundle of manifests hurried aboard, the lines were cast off, the captain sounded the engine room bells, and she sailed for the north ON TIME.

Mr. Harper was very much better, so Mrs. Harper allowed the nurse an evening off. As she herself was to keep a very important engagement, she told Bridget to watch the sick-room and gave her several orders, which, she impressed upon the Irish girl's mind, were very important. Returning later than she intended, she heard Mr. Harper moving restlessly and, after quieting him, she sought Bridget for information.

"I wonder what makes Mr. Harper so restless. He was sleeping very soundly when I went out. Do you know, Bridget?"

"No, mum," said the conscientious girl, "unless I disturbed his moind when I woke him up to give him his sheepin' powder."

RHEUMATISM

SCIATICA AND LUMBAGO, QUICKLY CURED BY "KEPHALDOL"

A druggist in Toronto said that he was asking an Old Country customer of his about KEPHALDOL TABLETS. This customer told him "I suffered from severe Rheumatism and Sciatica for 20 years, hardly ever being free from these troubles. I read about KEPHALDOL in the Glasgow papers and sent home for some. Three hours after taking two tablets, the pain was almost gone, and after taking six or seven, I hadn't a bit of pain."

This druggist went in to see his doctor about his wife and asked him if he had ever heard of KEPHALDOL. The doctor said, "Yes, I understand KEPHALDOL is a reliable sedative and anodyne, relieving pain without affecting the heart or vital organs. Since KEPHALDOL has been introduced into Canada, I have prescribed it in cases of severe Headache and Neuralgia, and just recently succeeded in helping a most severe case of La Grippe with it."

Since then, this druggist has ordered KEPHALDOL and recommended it to those of his customers who wanted something to relieve pain. If you are unable to get KEPHALDOL Tablets at your druggist's, send 50c to Kephaldol Limited, 31 Latour St., Montreal.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Little Mr. Eunstein, a travelling salesman, on Thanksgiving Day found himself far away from home, and naturally very lonesome. He knew not a soul in the hotel at which he was staying, and he decided that he must attract some attention at any cost.

Presently a bell-hop came through the lobby paging a Mr. Murphy. "Mr. Murphy! Mr. Murphy!" he shouted. At this point Mr. Einstein jumped up and hollered: "Say, boy, vat initials?"

A bachelor of considerable wealth was much sought after by many of the most charming young women of the town.

Minnie Rivers, a very pretty maiden, was sure she had brought him almost to the point of proposal.

"What was the happiest moment of your life?" she asked, while they were taking a moonlight stroll one evening.

"The happiest moment of my life," answered the bachelor, with a reminiscent smile, "was when the jeweller took back an engagement ring and gave me some cuff links in exchange."

A Sunday school teacher, after conducting a lesson on the story of "Jacob's Ladder," concluded by saying "Now is there any little girl or boy who would like to ask a question about the lesson?"

"A question, Susie?" asked her teacher.

"I would like to know," said Susie "if the angels have wings, why did they have to climb up the ladder?"

The teacher thought for some moments, and then, looking about the class, asked: "Is there any little boy who would like to answer Susie's question?"

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER V.

"Alcide"

Courtlaw took up his hat and coat at once, but Anna motioned him to remain.

"Please stay," she said briefly. "Will you come in, Sir John? I believe that I have heard my sister speak of you. This is my friend, Mr. David Courtlaw—Sir John Ferringhall."

Sir John acknowledged the introduction without cordiality. He entered the room with his usual deliberation, and looked covertly about him. He noticed the two chairs close together. Anna was still holding her cigarette between her fingers. Her likeness to her sister gave him at first almost a shock; a moment afterwards he was conscious of a wonderful sense of relief. For if the likeness between the sisters was remarkable, the likeness between this girl and the poster which he had come from studying was more remarkable still.

"I must repeat," Sir John said, "that I much regret disturbing you at such an unseemly hour. My only excuse is that I missed my way here, and am leaving Paris early tomorrow morning."

"If your business with me is of importance," Anna said calmly, "it does not matter in the least about the hour. Have you brought me a message from my sister? I understood, I believe, that she was seeing you last night."

"Your sister," he answered, "did me the honour of dining with me last night."

"Yes."

After all, it was not so easy. The girl's eyes never left his face. She was civil, but she was obviously impatient to know his errand. Afraid, no doubt, he thought grimly, that her other visitor would leave.

"I believe," he said slowly, "that I shall do best to throw myself upon your consideration and tell you the truth. I have recently made your sister's acquaintance, and in the course of conversation I understood from her that her Christian name was Anna. Some friends who saw us dining together persist in alluding to her as Miss Annabel Pellissier. I am guilty practically of the impertinence of coming to ask you whether I misunderstood your sister."

"Is my sister's Christian name, then, of so much importance to you?" she asked with a faint smile.

"The things involved in it are," he answered gravely.

She accepted his rejoinder with a brief nod. Courtlaw opened his lips, but remained silent in the face of her imperative gesture.

"Let me hasten," she said, "to assure you. My sister was scarcely likely to make a mistake. She told you—the truth."

Courtlaw's walking stick, which he had been handling, fell with a crash to the ground. He stooped to recover it, and his face was hidden. Sir John felt and looked several years younger.

"I am much obliged to you," he said. "Really, I do not know why I should have doubted it."

"Nor I," she remarked tersely.

He looked at her with a certain curiosity. She was a very elegant young woman, slightly taller perhaps than her sister, and with an air of reserved strength underneath her quiet face and manner which Annabel may have lacked. It was hard to associate her with the stories which he and all Paris had heard of "Alcide."

"You, then," he said, "are 'Alcide.' That wonderful poster—is of you."

She lifted her eyebrows.

"I am sorry," she said, "if you find the likeness unsatisfactory. My friends consider it wonderfully faithful. Have you any more questions to ask me?"

Sir John, on his way down, had determined to hint to this young woman that, providing certain contingencies which he had in his mind should come to pass, he would be prepared to make her a handsome offer to change her name. He found, however, that now the time had come he utterly lacked the courage to attempt any such speech.

"None, I thank you," he answered. "I will not intrude upon you further."

"Wait," she said.

He turned back at once.

"I have answered all your questions," she said. "Perhaps you will not object to answering one for me. You have thought it worth while to take some considerable pains to resolve for yourself my sister's identity. May I ask the nature of your interest in her?"

He hesitated.

"It is not an easy matter," he said, "for me to offer you an altogether adequate explanation. I have only seen your sister for a very brief time, and I am a little past the age when a man does headstrong things. At the same time, I must say that I am most anxious to improve my acquaintance with her. I am a single man, and——"

"Thank you," she interrupted. "I will not ask you to explain further. Good-night."

He left at once, immensely relieved, yet scarcely satisfied with himself as regarded his share of the interview with this young woman. They heard his footsteps descending the stone staircase, growing fainter and fainter. Then Courtlaw looked across at her with a white puzzled face.

"Why did you lie to that man?" he asked fiercely. "How dared you do yourself this injustice?"

"I did it for her sake," she answered. "It may be her salvation. I believe that he will marry her."

"You would let him—knowing—all that you know?"

"Why not? She is my flesh and blood. She is more dear to me than anything else. Perhaps if I had watched over her more closely, things would have been different."

"You! Why, you have been an angel to her," he exclaimed impatiently. "You know very well that she is selfish and pleasure-loving to the backbone. You have made enough sacrifices for her surely without this. Besides, you cannot tell where it will end. You have taken upon your shoulders the burden of her misdeeds. You may have to carry them further and longer than you think. Oh, it is unbearable."

The man's face was dark with passion. It was as though he were personally aggrieved. His tone was rough, almost threatening. The girl only smiled at him serenely, but she laid her hand for a moment quietly upon his.

"Dear friend," she said, "this is a matter which you must leave to me to do as I think best. Annabel is my own sister, you know, almost my own relative. If I do not look after her, she has no one. And she is very young, younger than her years."

It was significant of her influence over him that he answered her calmly, although a stream of angry thoughts were struggling for expression within him.

"Look after her! Why not? But you have done it all your life. You have been her guardian angel. But even you cannot alter her character. Annabel was born soulless, a human butterfly, if ever there was one. The pursuit of pleasure, self-gratification, is an original instinct with her. Blood and bone, body and spirit, she is selfish through and through. Even you have not been able to hold her back. I speak no harm of her. She is your sister, and God knows I wish her none. But——" A look checked him.

"I know," she said quietly, "that Paris, where she has been so much admired, is not a good place for her. That is why I am glad that she has gone to London."

He rose from his chair, and walked restlessly up and down the room. The passion of pent-up speech compelled action of some sort. There was a black fear in his heart. He stopped before her suddenly.

"You, too," he said abruptly. "You mean to follow her. You will go to London?"

"It is necessary," she answered. "You yourself have decided that—apart from the question of Annabel."

He was suddenly calm.

"It is part of the irony of life," he said. "One is always playing the surgeon, one kills always the thing one loves best. I meant to lie to you. Would to God I had."

She shook her head.

"The surgeon's knife is surely a kindly weapon, she declared. "It was best for me to know. Later on I could scarcely have forgiven you."

"And now—I am to lose you."

"For a little time," she answered. "I meant to say good-bye to you tonight. Or, after all, is it worth while? The Channel is a little broader than the Boulevard—but one crosses it sometimes."

He looked at her with white, set face.

"Yes," he said, "I shall come. That is very certain. But, after all, it will be different. I think that I have become a drug drinker. I need you every day. In the mornings I find labour easy because I am going to see you. In the afternoon my brain and fingers leap to their work because you have been with me. Anna, you shall not go. I cannot let you go."

She threw away the end of her cigarette. Without turning or looking in his direction she leaned forwards, her head supported upon her fingers, her elbows upon her knees. She gazed speadily out of the window at that are of glittering lights. He made a quick movement towards her, but she did not flinch. His arm fell to his side. The effort of self-repression cost him a sob.

"David," she said, "you are not a coward, are you?"

"I do not know," he muttered. "The bravest of us have joints in our armour."

"You are not a coward," she repeated, "or you would not be my friend. A woman may choose any one for her lover, but for her friend she makes no mistake. You are not a coward, David, and you must not talk like one. Put out your hand and bid me God-speed. It is the only way."

"I cannot do it!" he cried hoarsely, "I cannot part with you. You have grown into my life. Anna——"

Again she stopped him, but this time it was not so easy. The man's passion became almost unbearable at the thought of losing her. And yet, as she rose slowly to her feet and stood looking at him with outstretched hands, a strange mixture of expressions shining in her wonderful eyes, he realized in some measure the strength of her determination, felt the utter impotence of anything which he could say to her. He forgot for the moment his own self-pity, the egotism of his own passionate love. He took her hands firmly in his and raised them to his lips.

"You shall go," he declared. "I will make the days and weeks one long morning, but remember the afternoon must come. Always remember that."

Her hands fell to her side! She remained for a few moments standing as though listening to his retreating footsteps. Then she turned, and entering the inner room, commenced to dress hastily for the street.

CHAPTER VI.

A Question of Identification.

The little man with the closely-cropped beard and hair looked at her keenly through his gold eyeglasses. He sat before a desk littered all over with papers and official looking documents. The walls of the room were lined with shelves, on which were glass jars, retorts, countless bottles and many appliances of surgical science. A skeleton was propped against the mantlepiece. The atmosphere seemed heavy with the odour of drugs.

"You are Mademoiselle Pellisier?" he asked, without rising to his feet.

Anna admitted the fact.

"We sent for you several hours ago," he remarked.

"I came directly I was disengaged," Anna answered. "In any case there is probably some mistake. I have very few friends in Paris."

He referred to a sheet of paper by his side.

"Your name and address were upon an envelope found in the pocket of an Englishman who was brought here late last night suffering from serious injuries," he said in a dry official tone. "As it is doubtful whether the man will live, we should be glad if you would indentify him."

"It is most unlikely that I shall be able to do so," Anna answered. "To the best of my belief, I have not a single English acquaintance in the city."

"My dear young lady," the official said irritably, "this man would not have your name and address in his pocket without an object. You cannot tell whether you know him or not until you have seen him. Be so good as to come this way."

With a little shrug of the shoulders Anna followed him. They ascended by a lift to one of the upper floors, past a long ward, and finally came to a bed in the extreme corner, round which a screen had been arranged. A nurse came hurrying up.

"He is quiet only this minute," she said to the official. "All the time he is shouting and muttering. If this is the young lady, she can perhaps calm him."

Anna stepped to the foot of the bed. An electric light flashed out from the wall. The face of the man who lay there was clearly visible. Anna merely glanced at the coarse, flushed features, and at once shook her head.

"I have never seen him in my life," she said to the official. "I have not the least idea who he is."

Just then the man's eyes opened. He saw the girl, and sprang up in bed.

"Annabel at last," he shouted. "Where have you been? All these hours I have been calling for you. Annabel, I was lying. Who says that I am not Meysey Hill? I will trying to scare you. See, it is on my cards—M. Hill, Meysey Hill. Don't touch the handle, Annabel! Curse the thing, you've jammed it now. Do you want to kill us both? Stop the thing. Stop it!"

"I tell you it was a lie!" he shouted wildly. "Can't you believe me? I am Meysey Hill. I am the richest man in England. I am the richest man in the world. You love money. You know you do, Annabel. Never mind, I've got plenty. We'll go to the shop. Diamonds! You shall have all you can carry away, sacksful, if you like. Pearls too! I mean it. I tell you I'm Meysey Hill, the railway man. Don't leave me. Don't leave me in this beastly thing. Annabel! Annabel!"

His voice became a shriek. In response to an almost imperative gesture from the nurse, Anna laid her hand upon his. He fell back upon the pillows with a little moan, clutching the slim white fingers fiercely. In a moment his grasp grew weaker. The perspiration stood out on his forehead. His eyes closed.

Anna stepped back at once with a little gasp of relief. The hand which the man had been holding hung limp and nerveless at her side. She held it away from her with an instinctive repulsion, born of her unconquerable antipathy to the touch of strangers. She began rubbing it with her pocket handkerchief. The man himself was not a pleasant object. Part of his head was swathed in linen bandages. Such of his features as were visible were of coarse mould. His eyes were set too close together. Anna turned deliberately away from the bedside. She followed the official back into his room.

"Well?" he asked her tersely.

"I can only repeat what I said before," she declared. "To the best of in my life."

"But be recognized you," objected the official.

my belief, I have never seen the man

"He fancied that he did," she corrected him coolly. "I suppose delusions are not uncommon to patients in his condition."

The official frowned.

"Your name and address in his pocket was no delusion," he said sharply. "I do not wish to make impertinent inquiries into your private life. Nothing is of any concern of ours except the discovery of the man's indentity. He was picked up from amongst the wreckage of a broken motor on the road to Versailles last night, and we have information that a lady was with him only a few minutes before the accident occurred."

"You are very unbelieving," Anna said coldly. "I hope you will not compel me to say again that I do not know the man's name, nor, to the best of my belief, have ever seen him before in my life."

LACROSSE IN ORANGEVILLE

The following is taken from the sporting columns of the Toronto Star of Monday last:—

"Orangeville preceded the lacrosse boom by one year. Last season the town did itself proud in getting together the boys in a local league. Starting the season with but six or eight players with previous experience, they boosted the game so well that in two weeks over 100 boys were out to practice.

A town league of six teams was organized, three teams in the junior series of players 15 years of age and under, and three in the senior. Any player, regardless of age, was eligible for the senior teams. A series of twelve 45-minute games were played in the evening in each group and so well were the games contested and the interest maintained that all the games in the junior and all but one in the senior series were played. One game in the senior was postponed on account of wet weather and as it had no bearing on the group it never was played.

There is no better lacrosse town in Canada than Orangeville, where, with a population of 2500 people, over 100 players can be gotten out. The town has supported senior, intermediate, and junior champions in the past. They go further than this and will support an honest team, whether they win all the time or not. Very few towns will do this. The majority have to have winners all the time. A good game, win if you can, but give us good lacrosse, is the slogan.

The town is greatly interested in the lacrosse boom going on al over the Province and are great admirers of Secretary Doyle, of the O.A.L.A., for the consistent and hard work he is doing to boost the good old game along. Here's good luck to you, Frank."

OUR HOME WOMEN HAVE BEAUTIFUL HAIR

Next time you go to the theatre or to the "movies" just notice, if you please, how many of our home ladies have beautiful hair—glossy, lustrous, and well-dressed. Then if you will pick out five or ten of those whose hair seems to be particularly pretty and will ask them what they use on it, we feel sure that at least more than half of them will say "Harmony Hair Beautifier." It is fast becoming the rage with both men and women who are particular about the appearance of their hair.

Sprinkle a little Harmony Hair Beautifier on your hair each time before brushing it. Contains no oil; will not change color of hair, nor darken gray hair.

To keep the hair and scalp dandruff-free and clean, use Harmony Shampoo. This pure liquid shampoo gives an instantaneous rich lather that immediately penetrates to every part of the hair and scalp, insuring a quick, thorough cleansing. Washed off just as quickly, the entire operation takes only a few moments. Contains nothing that can harm the hair; leaves no harshness or stickiness—just a sweet cleanliness.

Both preparations come in odd-shaped, very ornamental bottles, with sprinkler tops. Harmony Hair Beautifier, $1.00. Harmony Shampoo, 50c. Both guaranteed to satisfy you in every way, or your money back. Sold only at the more than 7000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only by us. T. F. & T. J. Brown, Druggists, Orangeville, Ont.

GRAND VALLEY CASES

Landlord Harper, of Commercial Hotel, Fined $50 and Costs for Selling After Hours.

On Thursday last Police Magistrate T. C. Hamilton and S. Tate, J.P., held court in Carnegie Hall, when J. Montgomery an interdicted person was charged with being under the influence of liquor. J. M. Kearns appeared for the prosecution and A. A. Hughson looked after the interests of the defendant. The evidence of Thos. Woods, Will Watson and Walter Dixon went to show that on the occasion mentioned the defendant was staggering up the street. The defence was that the sidewalks and roads were icy, and Montgomery was merely slipping.—Mr. Hughson also objected to the service of the papers placing defendant on the prohibited list, claiming that if the prohibition is to date from date of mailing by Inspector, the letter should be mailed at defendant's post office. This objection was not sustained. It seems that defendant's wife had placed him on the list, and then when the papers came she burned them, fearing punishment at her husband's hands. The Bench found Montgomery guilty and imposed a fine of $10.00 and costs, amounting in all to over $22.00.

Immediately after the decision, Mr. Kearns had Mr. Montgomery sworn under Section 135a of the Liquor License Act to state where he got the liquor, but as he had pleaded not guilty to the first charge he could scarcely be expected to admit the offence in this case, and again stated he got no liquor. The Bench did not wish to impose any penalty in this matter and let the matter drop.

Two cases were to have been heard against Mr. Harper of the Commercial Hotel, but it developed that Constable Graham had served a commercial traveller in appearance somewhat resembling Mr. Harper, with the papers and consequently nothing could be done. New papers were to be made out and the case to come up to-day.—Star & Vidette.

Harper was fined $50 and costs last Thursday. He was tried on a charge of selling after hours. The accused was defended by Lawyer Haverson, of Toronto, and A. A. Hughson, Orangeville. J. M. Kearns, Arthur, conducted the prosecution.

Davis-Hammond.

A very pretty, though quiet, wedding took place in Moose Jaw, Sask., on Thursday, March 19th, when Miss Violet Hammond, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Hammond, of Orangeville, became the bride of Mr. Charles F. Davis, of Little Woody, Sask. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. T. McTavish, pastor of the Methodist Church. The bride, who was given away by her uncle, was becomingly dressed in striped silk trimmed with shadow lace. Her travelling suit was brown whipcord with hat and coat to match. The many Orangeville friends of the bride extend their good wishes and congratulations.

GLORIOUS HAIR

Girls and women of all ages want to be beautiful and attractive, but unsightly, thin and lifeless hair destroys half the beauty of a pretty face.

If your hair is losing its natural color, is falling out, dull, streaky, full of dandruff, too dry, or if the scalp itches and burns do not be alarmed, use Parisian Sage. Rub it well into the scalp. It will go right to the hair roots, nourish them, and stimulate the hair to grow long and beautiful. It removes dandruff with one application, stops itching scalp, falling hair and makes the head feel fine.

Parisian Sage supplies the hair with what is needed to make it soft, thick and gloriously radiant. It is sold in fifty cent bottles by F. S. Pickering, and at all drug counters. Look for the trade mark—"The Girl with the Auburn Hair." Accept no other.

Claims amounting to $5,000 were given against the C.P.R. for damages by fire in Vespra last summer.

Rev. H. Piercey has resigned the pastorate of the Wiarton Baptist church. He intends to tour the West as an elocutionist.

IMPURE BLOOD IN THE SPRING

The Passing of Winter leaves People Weak and Depressed.

As winter passes away it leaves many people feeling weak, depressed and easily tired. The body lacks that vital force and energy which pure blood alone can give.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all-year-round blood builder and nerve tonic, but they are especially useful in the spring. Every dose helps to make new, rich, red blood. Returning strength commences with their use and the vigor and cheerfulness of good health quickly follows.

There is just one cure for lack of blood and that is more blood. Food is the material from which blood is made, but Dr. Williams' Pink Pills double the value of the food we eat. They give strength, tone up the stomach and weak digestion, clear the complexion of pimples, eruptions and boils, and drive out rheumatic poisons.

If you are pale and sallow, if you feel continually tired out, breathless after slight exertion, if you have headaches or backaches, if your joints ache, if your appetite fails and food does not nourish nor sleep refresh you, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will make you well and strong. To build up the blood is the special purpose of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and that is why they are the best spring medicine. If you feel the need of a tonic at this season give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial and you will rejoice in new health, new strength and new energy. Do not let the trying weather of summer find you weak and ailing. Build yourself up now with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—the pills that strengthen.

Ask for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and do not be persuaded to take something else. If your dealer does not keep these Pills they will be sent by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Loudon has sold his residence on the Main street to Harold Lindsay who is moving into town. R. T. Stone, of Toronto, has sold his residence on Second Avenue, Shelburne, to James Jelly, who gets possession on May 1st. W. T. Bailey has sold the lot on the corner of 2nd avenue and Gordon street, which he recently purchased from S. H. Rutledge, to Alex. Matthews. Mr. Bailey has purchased R. J. Watson's brick residence on Owen Sound street.—Free Press.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicine. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

The Lamp Upset.

Mrs. Wilmer Walker, of Bowling Green, was severely burned on Monday night, March 31st, by the upsetting of a lamp. She was busy sewing by lamplight, when the lamp jiggled off the machine on which it was standing and broke when it struck the floor, igniting the oil. Mrs. Walker attempted to extinguish the blaze by beating the flames with her apron, but instead of succeeding her clothing caught fire. The unfortunate woman sustained terrible burns on her lower limbs, one arm, her neck and face. The burns on her arms and hands were particularly severe, the skin simply falling off. A doctor was summoned from Grand Valley and rendered every assistance possible. He is hopeful of the unfortunate woman's recovery, provided that complications do not occur.

RURAL SCHOOLS.

Ontario Educational Association Will Devote Considerable Time to Country School Problems.

Each year more prominence is given to the discussion of rural education problems at the Ontario Educational Association convention, held annually in Toronto during Easter week. Those in charge of the preparation of this year's program have set aside Wednesday afternoon, April 15, in the Public School Department, for papers and discussion on the work of the country schools in solving Ontario's rural problem, through the introduction of agricultural teaching and the general "agriculturalizing" of rural school work. In the Inspectors' Department, both sessions on Wednesday are to be devoted entirely to rural school problems, and in the high school principals' section the high school course in agriculture will be discussed on Tuesday morning.

On Wednesday morning there will be a joint session of the high school science teachers' section and the continuation school section, to discuss the departmental plans for introducing agriculture into the regular work of the high and continuation schools, especially those situated in the smaller country towns and villages.

Two motorists, having almost ruined their tempers—and their tires—in a vain attempt to find a hotel with a vacant bed, were at last forced to make the best of a small inn. Even then they had to share a bed; which was—and on this the landlord laid great stress—a feather bed.

They turned in, and one of the pair was soon fast asleep. The other was not. He could not manage to dodge the lumps, and heard hour after hour strike on the church clock until three. Then he violently shook his snoring friend.

"What's the matter?" growled the sleeper. "It can't be time to get up yet!"

"No, it isn't," retorted his friend, continuing to shake him, "but it's my turn to sleep on the feather!"

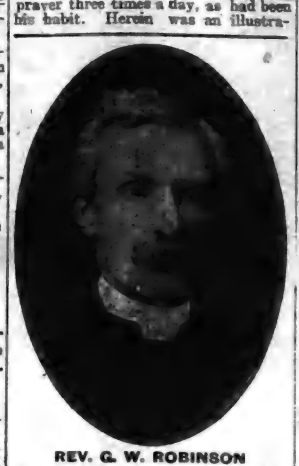
ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.



Rev. John Locke Occupied His Old Pulpit in Methodist Church Last Sabbath

Former Pastor Addressed Large Congregations at Morning and Evening Services.

Rev. John Locke, of Toronto, a former pastor, conducted anniversary services in the Methodist Church on Sunday, and delivered earnest and convincing discourses to large congregations both morning and evening. Rev. Mr. Locke was in excellent form and his vigorous and inspiring addresses were listened to with pleasure by many of his old friends here. At the morning service he first spoke to the children of the Sunday School for ten minutes, after which he delivered a practical address to the adult members of the congregation.

In the evening the minister addressed a large and closely attentive congregation upon the text, "Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed and gave thanks before his God as he did aforetime." Dan. 6:10.

The decree, the speaker stated, made no difference to Daniel, who went to his home and offered up prayer three times a day, as had been his habit. Herein was an illustration of the importance of cultivating habits of the right sort—habits alone on which blessings are founded, habits which show the way we are to walk, the life we are to live and the service we are to render to God and man. Habit, the dictionary states, is a practice that becomes binding. It is alarming to think how easily human beings fall into ruts and form habits, which they know are harmful. What is needed is to get on the right track, doing right because right is right, and since God is God, right is sure to win. Repeated doing makes doing easy, so that the thing which was hard to do the first time is easier the second and becomes easier every time until habit is established and doing becomes inevitable.

It has been said, continued Mr. Locke, that forty five per cent. of the criminals of this country might have been brought back to Christian service and have become good citizens, if they had only been taken in time along certain lines of training. It was of the first importance to get into the habit of looking to Jesus Christ. Someone has said that if we once look into the face of Jesus Christ, we can never afterwards commit a sin. God speaks to all that is good and noble in our natures. If we once get into the habit of looking to Him it becomes our very life.

The French Revolution failed because it lacked the inspiration of an immortal hope—the uplifting power of Christian principles and Christian ideals. There are those who are failing in life for the simple reason that they are not keeping their faces toward the Eternal Light. Let us run the race that is before us looking into the face of Jesus, the Author and Finisher of our Faith, as he now sits on the right hand of the Throne of God. He is able to give his people the power triumphant.

Next in importance is the church going habit. Someone has said a man must be more than a man to go to Church. "Before a man can be a man at all he must be more than a man." A man is more than a man, when his peace passes human understanding and his joy is more than perfect. We will never be the Christians we need to be until we are more than men by faith and prayer, and all the associations that go to lift our characters to all that is high and good.

Referring to the fact that women are more given to church attendance than men, Mr. Locke stated that in his own congregation he noticed an increase in the attendance of men. He believed that this was general and indicated that men were taking greater interest in the church and its work. People were in the habit of stating that they support the Church. As a matter of fact it is the Church that supports them. The Church is the safeguard of commerce, of home and family interests and helps to bring much needed strength to human character. It helps men and women to form the best friendships that are ever made on this earth.

Important also is the habit of right thinking. Form the habit of keeping the kind of company that fosters wholesomeness of thought. The brain centres, we have reason to believe, affect every part of our minds and bodies. Whatever we think has a great effect upon our morals and even upon our health. Wrong thoughts are a great factor in sending those who think them upon the downward path of life.

Lastly, Mr. Locke emphasized the importance of forming the habit of a reasonable and wholesome discipline of life. "All men of high character give to all parts of their body its due." We could never give all parts of our body its due, until we have given God the best. About one half of the people are only half well because they are over-indulgent. "For your own good and for the sake of God," said the minister in closing, "give up all things that will hinder you in any way from giving God the best. Then our yesterdays will be but pleasant memories, our todays wholesome realities and our tomorrows filled with bright promises and the abiding joys of service. To have comforted a broken heart, to have helped one bearing a burden is worth all it may cost you at any time. Follow right lines of habit, looking steadfastly into the face of Jesus Christ Himself and He will help us, men and women, on the way to an eternal destiny."

Under the leadership of Miss C. C. Wright the choir gave excellent assistance at both services. The special numbers in the morning were an anthem "There arose a Great Storm" with solo by Mrs. Bowles and a solo, "Lord, I'm Coming Home" by T. W. Huston. The evening anthem was, "The Day is Fast and O'er" with obligato duet by Mrs. Fowles and Mr. Matthews. Mr. Matthews also gave a solo, "The Wayside Cross," with hidden quartette chorus by Messrs. Price, Henderson, White and Huston.

Bible Class Banquet

On Wednesday night of last week about ninety young people were entertained at a banquet in the basement of the Methodist Church. The affair was given under the joint auspices of the Liebander and White Shield Bible Classes. An excellent repast was provided by the members of the White Shield Class. The tables were profusely decorated with carnations and evergreens and looked very attractive. After justice had been done to the good things provided by the young ladies, a toast list was fittingly honored in bright and interesting speeches. Rev. G. W. Robinson officiated as toastmaster and announced the following toasts: "Canada" proposed by G. F. Evans and responded to by R. P. Allin; "The Town" proposed by Elmer Still, replied to by Mayor Island; "The Sunday School" proposed by W. G. Kearns and replied to by W. M. Green; "The White Shield Class" proposed by A. W. Bradley and responded to by Mrs. (Rev.) G. W. Robinson. Rev. Mr. Scott, pastor of Simpson Ave. Methodist Church, Toronto, was present and addressed the young people on present day moral and social problems. Mr. Scott is an excellent speaker and his address was heard with close interest. Miss Emma King favored the gathering with a well-rendered piano solo.

LIFE INSURANCE FOR YOUR HOUSE

A TREE often lives several hundred years. Nature has protected the wood by covering it with bark to shield it from the elements.

When trees are sawed into lumber, Nature's protection is lost. Therefore, the wood used in your house must be paint protected to insure it against wear and weather.

"100% Pure" Paint is a good life insurance policy on your house. It protects against decay—pays for itself, over and over again, in the repairs it saves—adds value and beauty to the building as well as long life to the wood.

Martin-Senour "100% Pure" Paint

is what we recommend for all outside and inside painting. "100% Pure" is genuine White Lead, Oxide of Zinc, purest Colors, and Linseed Oil — ground to extreme fineness by powerful machinery—the combination of which produces a paint that is greatest in hiding, covering and wearing qualities—and makes it the cheapest to use as well as the most satisfactory.

Let us help you in selecting colors for your spring painting. 15

How Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Mrs. Lance.

Pembroke Woman Suffered for Fifteen Years. Before She Found Quick Relief and a Complete Cure.

Pembroke, Ont., April 6 (Special). —Of peculiar interest to women is the story of the cure of Mrs. Morile Lance, well known and highly respected here. Let Mrs. Lance tell that story in her own words.

"For about fifteen years I was a very sick woman," she says. "My sleep was broken and unrefreshing and I had a bitter taste in my mouth in the morning. I was often dizzy and flashes of light floated before my eyes. My limbs were heavy and I had a dragging across the loins.

"At last Rheumatism was added to my troubles and I also suffered from lumbago, dropsy and gravel. I felt that my kidneys were the cause of all my troubles and decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. From almost the first they did me good, and after taking twelve boxes I am again a well woman."

Women who suffer should learn that the cause of their troubles is bad kidneys. Having learned that, the rest is easy. Thousands of Canadians will tell you out of their own experience that Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure bad kidneys."

LIFE IS WHAT WE MAKE IT.

"I wish I could have kept up my studying, but I have had so many household cares that it has been almost impossible for me to get an opportunity even to read," said a woman in middle life.

Her hearer sympathized with her, yet later she recalled this woman's luxurious home, in which the lace curtains must always be done up on such a date, the brasses polished at such a time and the silver cleaned on another stated day. Nor had it always been possible for this housekeeper to find servants to fill her fastidious requirements. The listener repeated the regretful words of this woman to a friend, and supplemented them by saying:

"She does not realize that her life is largely what she has made it. She preferred to have an elegant home, with everything not merely comfortably clean, but uncomfortably neat, rather than take time for reading. Now I, myself, often lament that I have not time for piano practice, and wish I were a better player; but really it is my choice, for the few spare moments I might devote to music I spend on my books."

A party of young girls were embroidering, when one of them brought in a guest.

"I don't embroider, so I shall have to read to you or talk," said the newcomer.

The girl had found so many other things to do in the world that she was at a loss for a moment. "Why, I don't have time to embroider. I—I read."

"Read! Dear me! I never read more than two books a year. I don't have time to read."

For people of comparative leisure to assert that they cannot do what they like because they have no time seems absurd; the more so when we read, in Sir Walter Besant's "East London," that even the poor people of that section who must work hard for a livelihood have at command for their own use, in holidays and evenings, one-quarter of the whole year. To some all time is given, to to all some time is given, to choose what shall be done in it.

CHARGED WITH FRAUD

Peel County Town Men Allege that They Were Deceived in Prince Albert Land Deal.

An echo of the Prince Albert real estate boom was heard in the Brampton Police Court last Thursday morning, when Dr. Charles W. Burns, a Manitoba physician, was committed for trial for alleged fraud in connection with a land deal contracted in 1912 involving $23,400, on which partial payments were made by Judge McGibbon, and Messrs. B. F. Justin, K.C., J. B. Dixon, and Dr. Bryden, all well-known Bramptonians.

When offering the land for sale Dr. Burns is alleged to have represented that a quarter section in the immediate vicinity of Prince Albert had been sold to him by his uncle, and as he could not handle it, he was endeavoring to have it taken over by a syndicate.

The four Brampton citizens already mentioned, on the representations made by Dr. Burns, agreed to purchase 117 acres at $200 per acre, and of the purchase price, $10,000 was to be in cash, and the balance handed over at stated periods in $8,000 payments.

While discussing the sale the accused is stated to have declared that the land was situated one and a half miles from the city of Prince Albert, that it was high and dry, and every portion of it suitable for building on, and also that it was in the line of development of the city. He is further reported to have stated that he had been offered $300 an acre for it, but was selling it at a lower price as he needed some ready money.

Judge McGibbon took a trip to the west last fall to look over the property. It is stated he found it not to be as represented by the seller, that it was situated some miles from the city, and was full of holes. Instead of being level ground, it was hilly and not worth $5 an acre, although Dr. Burns is alleged to have informed the Judge that the property was staked out ready for the builders.

Mr. Justin also stated that he went west last fall to investigate the property, and declared that the property shown him as the section purchased by the syndicate was absolutely worthless, being "nothing but a duck pond."

On the evidence given Magistrate Crawford committed the prisoner for trial at the next court of competent jurisdiction, and he will probably be brought up again, at an early date. Crown Attorney W. H. McFadden conducted the case against the accused, who was refused bail.

Constable Rutledge, of Streetsville, brought Burns all the way from his home in Grand View, Man. The constable states that the accused is well thought of in Grand View, where he has a fine practice running $40 a day.

WONDERFUL DISCOVERY

An eminent scientist, the other day, gave his opinion that the most wonderful discovery of recent years was the discovery of Zam-Buk. Just think! As soon as a single thin layer of Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or a sore, such injury is insured against blood poison! Not one species of microbe has been found that Zam-Buk does not kill!

Then again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a sore, or a cut, or to skin disease, it stops the smarting. That is why children are such friends of Zam-Buk. They care nothing for the science of the thing. All they know is that Zam-Buk stops their pain. Mothers should never forget this.

Again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or to a diseased part, the cells beneath the skin's surface are so stimulated that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. This forming of fresh, healthy tissue from below is Zam-Buk's secret of healing. The tissue thus formed is worked up to the surface and literally casts off the diseased tissue above it. This is why Zam-Buk cures are permanent.

Only the other day Mr. Marsh, of 101 Delorimer Ave., Montreal, called upon the Zam-Buk Co. and told them that for over twenty-five years he had been a martyr to eczema. His hands were at one time so covered with sores that he had to sleep in gloves. Four years ago Zam-Buk was introduced to him, and in a few months it cured him. To-day—over three years after his cure of a disease he had for twenty-five years—he is still cured, and has had no trace of any return of the eczema!

All druggists sell Zam-Buk at 50c. box, or we will send free trial box if you send this advertisement and a 1c. stamp (to pay return postage). Address Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

D.D.D. Opens New Era In Cure of Skin Disease

Mr. Corns' case of eczema was known to almost every hospital and physician of reputation throughout the city of Toronto. His letter is another interesting demonstration of what is being accomplished by the famous specific D. D. D. Prescription.

"I will consider it a favor if you will allow me to add my testimonials to the many hundreds you no doubt have in praise of the great cures effected by the D. D. D. Prescription. I was a sufferer for two years with eczema on the legs and ankles. I tried three or four different doctors and none of them did me any good. I got tired of trying their remedies. I then went to a skin specialist, but he was no better than they.

I secured a trial bottle of D.D.D. and it did me so much good that I sent for a dollar bottle, also a cake of soap. That is all I used, and I am perfectly well. You are at liberty to use my name, for I consider D.D.D. the best remedy in use." L. W. CORNS, 21 Giveas St., Toronto, Can.

Ask any druggist to-day for D.D.D. Prescription. He'll tell you it allays the itch instantly—and soon there are signs of cure.

We have handled the remedy for years and regard it as the specific for skin troubles of all kinds. Come in or ask us about D.D.D. Prescription, also about D.D.D. soap, especially for tender skins.

We offer the first full size bottle on the guarantee that unless it stops the itch at once, it costs you not a cent.

NEW SHELBURNE MAIL ROUTE.

On Wednesday the old Rural Route No. 1 from Shelburne, of which Wm. McBride was the carrier, was dropped and a new one took its place. The new route goes west from Shelburne on the townline, serving both the Melancthon and Amaranth sides of the road as far as the 8th line of Amaranth; then down the 8th line of Amaranth to 25 sideroad; then east to the 7th line; then up to 30 sideroad; across 30 sideroad to the 6th line; down 6th line to 25 sideroad; east on 25 sideroad to 5th line; up the 5th line to 30 sideroad; east on 30 sideroad to 4th line; down 4th line to 25 sideroad; east on 25 sideroad to 3rd line; north on 3rd line to Shelburne. The riute covers a distance of 21¼ miles. Mr. Goe. B. Doney, of Shelburne, has the contract as carrier on the new route, and he has a mail wagon for the purpose that is a beauty and will be the envy of all the other rural mail carriers of the district. The wagon is of regulation city style with red box, royal coat of arms, handsome lettering and everything complete. A separate bag will be used for the mail of each person on the route. Jessopville and Keldon people will in future get their mail by way of Corbetton and Riverview. A rural route is already in operation from Jessopville and it is understood that the general re-arrangement of the routes will lead to the closing of the Keldon office, of which Mr. Wm. Anderson is postmaster. —Economist.

SHOVED ON CIRCULAR SAW.

Dungannon Citizen Meets Tragic Death While Cutting Wood.

Mr. Stephen Deeves, a resident of Dungannon, was practically shoved to his death about 8.30 last Monday morning while engaged in sawing a pile of logs for a neighbor in Dungannon. Deeves, who operates a threshing outfit, uses the engine part of it in the winter for cutting wood. On this fatal day he had placed his portable saw near a pile of logs which were near a stable door. While he was engaged in attending to the saw, which was driven by an engine some distance away, a neighbor called, and as his horse was being led into the stable, the engine made a peculiar noise at the moment, causing the horse to jump and strike the logs, which in turn struck Mr. Deeves in the back and pushed him face forwards on the saw. Unable to save himself he was badly lacerated on the chest and his face was almost cut in two. Dr. Case was immediately summoned as soon as Deeves' plight was discovered, but long before the doctor could reach the scene of the accident life was extinct.—Goderich Signal.

PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

Offers Only Real Solution of Canada's Railway Problems

Rev. A. E. de St. Dalmas Maintains That Canadian People Have Missed Two Great Opportunities.

Canada has now seemingly from reports two transcontinental railways practically in distress. The Canadian Northern is in urgent need and is seeking Government help. Rumour has it that the G.T.P. is either near the same point, or it will seek freedom from complying with the agreements and engagements entered into with the late Government, re. the taking over of the eastern transcontinental section and paying the stipulated interest upon the huge amount expended upon that portion, but paid for by the country. Should the said agreement NOT stand, Canada ought to have some say about the arrangement as a whole, i.e., the whole agreement to be faithfully carried out by the Company, or the Government to take over the whole from ocean to ocean. Is not this the wisest solution of the whole problem? Never again in the history of Canada will her people have the great opportunity for public ownership that seems now to present itself. Therefore let the Government be wise and buy out the two roads, both the C. N. R. and the G. T. P. Is this not the best way to insure their remaining true to Canada, and true to Canadian transportation interests? Demand Government ownership now that the time seems opportune, regardless of the cost, let this action be taken immediately and pay dollar for dollar for all that every shareholder has honestly put into the great undertaking, but squeeze out all the water, paying only for genuine investments. Should this cost four or even five hundred million dollars carry it through, and let every one remember that before this century, which is said to be Canada's, is half out, this purchase will at least double in value and Canada will possess a railway asset equal in value to her whole debt.

This is no new idea of mine for in 1874 I went from Scranton Pa., to Ottawa to present to the Government of that day a scheme for the construction of the proposed Canadian ocean to ocean railroad and also an immigration scheme. For this purpose I had letters from the late Senator McMaster and Premier Mackenzie. In Mr. Mackenzie's reply to me he wrote (his letter is before me) "May 16, 1874. The Government themselves have a scheme for carrying out the great undertaking etc." Then I gave an address in the Ottawa Y.M.C.A. upon the question. But Public Ownership was abandoned. Again in May, 1902, when the Transcontinental Railway (the G.T.P.) was being considered, I wrote a letter advocating Public Ownership. The four leading Toronto dailies published this letter, as well as a number of the country newspapers. In this letter I used the following illustration:—

"In a border city of the United States some years ago, the authorities decided to light the city by means of a large number of high iron towers, with from three to five large arc lights upon each. The said towers to be erected about every three or four crossings throughout the city. The contract was signed and in time fulfilled; toward the end of the term the same plan was decided upon again. A second tender was then called for and finally let to another party. When I was in the city last there were two systems of expensive towers erected on opposite corners of the crossroads. The city had paid for two systems of towers, wires and lamps etc., yet did not own any part of either system. Is not the Dominion of Canada now in danger of being very much in the same condition as far as transcontinental railways are concerned? As a nation we have paid for one, the C.P.R., and now two or three other parties desire to be served likewise, and there is danger of precedents: where and how will it end? The Government, above all things and at all costs, must act honorably, but that does not imply that it is bound hand and foot to carry through every mistaken agreement. Surely there is a way whereby the Government can refuse to go further than grants already given and if need be buy back at fair valuation interests granted etc. Do not present conditions plainly call "halt"? Twenty-nine years ago I proposed a plan for the construction of the C.P.R., but not having the needed political influence could not get a hearing, though Americans and Canadians to whom I submitted my plans admitted that they were the very best that had been proposed."

While Sir Wilfred Laurier was Premier I communicated with three of his Ministers of Railways re. my plans. All three were in favor of public ownership, but they could not carry it, because, as one told me, "There was not enough in it for the party." Now as a result we have two great Companies in difficulties. To further help them and give them freedom from these difficulties means that Canada will not only have to put up millions, but will then have to fight three great railway monopolies. Is it too late to let Public Ownership settle the question? Surely not. Let this action be taken and Canada's transportation problem will be largely settled, and this action will help to hasten the settlement of others. This will not only be a wise move nationally for our 8,000,000 citizens now, but also for the 20,000,000 at the end of this century, also for the then over 500,000,000 within our Empire. Who can tell what will be the value of the railways then? This will not only put two great monopolies, and monopolies are a danger to any country, out of business, but will also be a mighty factor in imperial defence, truly representing Canada of to-day. It will also help to bind the Canada of that day to the Empire for their mutual good. Let our Government deal fairly but firmly with these companies now, and this decisive step will hasten to solve other Canadian problems, and go far to put our Dominion in an enviable position from a transportation standpoint. Government ownership was my ideal when I first went to Ottawa, and nothing has transpired since to change those opinions.

Just a word in closing upon immigration and eastern Canada's rural problem. We have heard much lately upon these two great problems, viz., the burden that the eastern section of the transcontinental railway will be upon the country, and almost a greater difficulty, the rural problem, in the alarming decrease of her rural population. I am satisfied that my immigration policy will not only solve the just named railway problem, making the road pay, but will also help to repopulate the rural districts that are suffering most. For this reason I now publish this communication. The plan is calculated not only to bring out immigrants but also capital with them.

A. E. de ST. DALMAS.

JUDGMENT FOR MRS. MAXWELL.

Plaintiff Will Get Mare Back and $15 Damages for Wrongful Detention.

Argument in the Maxwell vs. May horse case took place before Judge Fisher on Tuesday, Mr. A. A. Hughson appearing for the plaintiff and Messrs. Geo. Robb and J. L. Island for the defendant, Harry May. Later in the day His Honour gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Mrs. Jos. Maxwell. C. H. Smith, an Orangeville butcher, bought a 3 year old sorrel mare at Mrs. Maxwell's sale on Jan. 20th, and in the evening gave in payment a promissory note signed by himself alone. This Mrs. Maxwell declined to accept and failing to secure a satisfactory settlement brought suit for the recovery of the mare from Harry May, who had in the meantime bought her from Jas. B. McNichol, to whom Smith sold shortly after the sale. The Judge finds that Smith took possession of the mare without consulting Mrs. Maxwell about the acceptance of the note and that the property in the mare never passed to him, but on the contrary that he took possession of the animal without color of right. The evidence, His Honour further finds, shows that Thos. Maxwell, the plaintiff's son, did not have authority from the plaintiff to deliver the mare to Smith and that he did not so deliver her as alleged by Smith. The mare, Judge Fisher values at $128 and assesses damages of $15 for her wrongful detention. The judgment is in the following terms:—

"I direct that judgment be entered for the delivery of mare in question to the plaintiff forthwith, and for the payment to the plaintiff of the sum of $15 damages for wrongful detention, and the costs of this action, and I further direct that in case of refusal to deliver up said mare, the defendant be arrested and detained in prison until he complies and that a writ issue accordingly, and also that the goods and chattels of the defendant to double the value of the property in question be taken and kept until further order of the Court, to enforce obedience to the writ."

SPRING IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

A Tonic Medicine is a Necessity at This Season.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all year round tonic, blood-builder and nerve-restorer. But they are especially valuable in the spring when the system is loaded with impurities as a result of the indoor life of the winter months. There is no other season when the blood is so much in need of purifying and enriching, and every dose of these pills helps to make new, rich, red blood. In the spring one feels weak and tired—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give strength. In the spring the appetite is often poor—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills develop the appetite, tone the stomach and aid digestion. It is in the spring that poisons in the blood find an outlet in disfiguring pimples, eruptions and boils—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills speedily clear the skin because they go to the root of the trouble in the blood. In the spring anaemia, rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia, erysipelas and many other troubles are most persistent because of poor, weak blood, and it is at this time when all nature takes on new life that the blood most seriously needs attention. Some people dose themselves with purgatives at this season, but these only further weaken themselves. A purgative merely gallops through the system, emptying the bowels, but it does not cure anything. On the other hand Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood which reaches every nerve and organ in the body, bringing new strength, new health and vigor to weak, easily tired men, women and children. Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills this spring—they will not disappoint you.

RURAL DEPOPULATION.

Rev. John MacDougall Discusses Problem in Masterly Address.

Rev. John MacDougall, of Spencerville, whose book "The Rural Problem" has been attracting a great deal of attention lately, was the guest of Rev. W. M. Morris on Monday and while in town delivered two addresses on Ontario's Rural Problem—one before the local Ministerial Association and the other at a union meeting of the Young People's Societies of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches in the Sunday School room of the former church. Mr. MacDougall is a scholarly and convincing speaker. He has evidently given much thought and careful study to the rural problem and has at his fingers ends a fund of illuminating statistics relative to the depopulation of rural Ontario and the consequent economic loss to the country, village and town communities of the province. Informing as these statistics are, they are surpassed in interest by Mr. MacDougall's suggestions for the remedying of existing conditions, the betterment of life on the farm and the repopulating of our country districts.

In his address to the Ministerial Association, Mr. MacDougall stated that it was a privilege to address a rural Ministerial Association, which, as soon as organized, takes up the Rural Problem. But, it might be asked, is there a rural problem for the Church? That there is a serious problem for some agency to solve is manifest. It was not necessary to go further than the County of Dufferin for proof of this statement. In the last census period the township of Mono diminished over 13 per cent. in population. This, however, does not accurately represent the loss, which cannot be measured by diminution alone, but by diminution plus the natural increase cancelled. Where any plague to carry off in two years all of the youth of a community as they reached maturity together with more than one-eighth of the whole population, the time would be considered ripe for the employment of some remedial agency. While Mono lost only 13 per cent., Mulmur decreased in population by 15 per cent.; Melancthon by 19 per cent.; East Luther by 20 per cent., Amaranth by 21 per cent. and East Garafraxa by 23 per cent. That the conditions of life which cause such an exodus present a serious problem in national welfare is manifest.

But is there a problem for the Church? There are those who maintain that there is not. They claim, and rightly, that the Church is more than holding its own in comparison with other institutions, despite the diminished population. But it is just in the force of that ugly word "despite" that the point of the matter lies. Can the Church continue to hold its own. The Church is a means, not an end. The question is not one of maintaining her position, but of serving the country community in its need. Even from the point of view of the Church's growth, a pressing problem presents itself. During the last decade six Presbyteries in Ontario lost over 1000 families in the total number of households under their care. But even more significant is the growing extent of the loss, which shows a steady increase from year to year. In this respect the experience of all the churches is very much alike.

But to understand what the present trend leads to we have only to look to the United States where the rural problem has reached a more acute stage. Rural surveys in Missouri in 1912 disclosed the fact that there were in that State 550 abandoned churches, in Ohio 800 and in Illinois 1700. Nor is it simply that superfluous churches have disappeared. At the Christian Conservation Congress held in New York in 1912 it was stated without challenge that this condition amounted to the virtual collapse of the Church in rural districts over large areas. In seventy townships in ten counties in Illinois not a single resident pastor was found in the open country. They had gone to live in the towns, travelling out to their churches to preach. The problem is one for the Church even from the lower ground of self-preservation.

That the problem is one for the Church is seen in that it is a social problem. The household is diminishing. In 1901 the average number of persons to the household throughout Canada was 5.16. By 1911 the average had fallen to 4.84. In Grenville it had fallen to 4.07, in West Elgin to 4.1, in West Middlesex to 4.1, in North Middlesex to 3.8, in Prince Edward to 3.8 and in Norfolk to 3.7. This is not race suicide. It is class suicide. There are not to any alarming extent childless homes; they are homes where children have gone away. But is it not a matter for serious thought, when, in a population of over 20,000 persons, such as in rural Norfolk, the children remaining in the community are 15 per cent. less in number than the parents? Here is a social problem of the first magnitude.

Women are more dissatisfied with the country than are men. In the cities of Ontario the number of women is normal—is in accordance with the world's averages—102 women to 100 men. But in rural Ontario there are 116 men to 100 women. The excess of men over women in Ontario's country districts is 85,900. This dissatisfaction of women with country life is a serious social problem.

Homes are being blotted out. Consider this ascending scale of loss in a dozen Ontario townships:—Arran closed 10 per cent. of its farm homes between 1901 and 1911; Greenock had 11 per cent. of its dwellings fall into disuse in the same period; Kinloss 12 per cent.; East Zorra, 13 per cent.; Edwardsburg 14 per cent.; Artifield 15 per cent.; Egremont 16 per cent.; Darling 17 per cent.; Abinger 18 per cent.; Cavan 19 per cent.; Normanby 20 per cent. Here is another social problem of the first magnitude.

The schools present another grave social problem. There are 110 district schools in Ontario, with an average attendance of less than five pupils. In such schools there can be no play-groups. Children grow up in them unsocialized through lack of play experience. There is no such thing known as team play and therefore in adult years they do not understand how to co-operate.

Because of its social character the problem is one for the Church. It is also a problem for the Church, because it is at every point a problem of a personal character. The question of the exploitation of natural resources and the depletion of the fertility of the soil enter largely into the problem. The Church must teach that all exploitation is immoral and that conservation is a moral task. Agricultural colleges are doing a splendid work in making scientific knowledge about agriculture available for farmers. Their acceptance of this knowledge is at bottom a question of character, of openness of mind and decision of purpose. But especially is co-operation a test of character, of trust in one's fellowmen and of willingness to labor in a common cause. These various matters, relating as they do to character, make the church one of the agencies necessary to the solution of this problem. The problem concerns the Church for a still deeper reason. It relates to the directing of our developing civilization. Scientific agriculture is sure to come, and to come soon, There are two possibilities as to how it shall come. It may come in the form of co-operation as in Denmark, with the tools of production remaining in the hands of all and its rewards going to all. Or it may come along the lines of the application of mechanical and chemical knowledge to manufacturing industries, resulting in the "Great Business" with thousands of wage-slaves under a few millionaire employers, as in the San Joachim delta in California. There one Japanese millionaire employs an American agricultural college graduate at a salary of $5000 a year to see that his farming operations are thoroughly scientific. A score of great proprietors are making enormous wealth, but living conditions so degenerate are not to be found elsewhere in America. Land is let on yearly lease. An American gang takes charge when alfalfa or barley is grown, Chinese or Japanese when the crop is potatoes, Danes or Swedes when it is beet roots and Orientals or Italians when the ground is planted in onions. The dwellings are mere shelter huts, not homes. The school and the church are unknown. The direction of such problems in civilization is essentially the work of the Church.

What can the Church do in the way of practical help with respect to the immediate situation? It can adopt Y.M.C.A. methods in recreation. Three counties in Ontario are organized with County Associations. The Secretary for the County is the only person under pay. His salary comes from the Christian men of the county. He goes to every village and hamlet, organizing and directing. Such work has proved thoroughly efficient in the United States. Much can also be done by fostering the work of the Departments of Agriculture and Education in our own localities, by aiding such institutions as the School Fair, the School Garden, Institutes etc. and by encouraging the use of bulletins sent out by these Departments.

Rural surveys would also assist very much. What is needed is to learn accurately what the situation is, and this can only be done by modern and scientific methods. Such a survey has just been made in Bruce County and is likely to be followed by the best results. A ministerial association could render few better services, than the conducting of such a survey. One of the needs brought out very clearly by rural surveys in the United States was the absolute need of community service by every church, and not service only to its own people. The logical outcome of this is organic church union. Where congregations were mapped out forty years ago when rural population was sixty per cent. greater than it is now, where churches were built thirty years ago to accommodate a larger population than then existed and where a large diminution has come instead of the expected increase, there is found a situation as imperatively demanding union as any which exists in the mission fields of the west. But until such union comes there is need of the co-operation of every church, all working together for the cause of the Kingdom of God in their locality.

The speaker's closing thought was the need of a broader training for the ministry. A minister in the country, he said, does not need to be a trained agriculturist, but he does need to know the spirit and the scope of the new and better agriculture. He needs to be in close sympathy with the progressive young farmers of his neighborhood. He needs to know sociology and social service as well as theology. Ministers need to be in touch with the problems that their people are facing. They should be in touch with the boys who are thinking of leaving home and with the fathers, who are perhaps making things harder than they need be for the boys. They should be able to show those who think of going to the city without any training to fit them for its life the hard experiences that are before them and to give the people of the country a vision of their own felicity. Ministers should be men of the country themselves. Men in the ministry often say: "I must move to some High School town in order to educate my children." "On what conclusion must we?" Our farmers cannot do so. Should we not stand by them? It may be that our income should become such that we can afford to send our children to town during school days. But we need in all such things to stand with the farmer both for his and the Church's good."

In his address to the Young People's Societies Monday evening, Mr. MacDougall followed in a general way the lines of his morning address to the Ministerial Association. The address was followed with close interest by the audience. At its close the speaker was tendered a hearty vote of thanks upon motion of Rev. G. W. Robinson and Rev. A. E. de St. Dalmas. St. Andrew's S. S. orchestra gave several selections during the meeting.

EARNSCLIFFE.

Joseph Armstrong, an old and widely known resident of this district, passed away recently after a lengthy illness from stomach trouble. Mr. Armstrong had been in poor health for a year or so and had been confined to the house since Christmas. He was a native of Tyrone County, Ireland, and came to Mulmur in 1872, residing in this township continuously since that time. Mrs. Armstrong died in September, 1910. The sorrowing members of the family are Thos. Armstrong, Mansfield, Jas. Armstrong, Mono; John on the home farm; Mrs. John Duncan, Cromdie; Mrs. Jos. Haddock and Mrs. Thos. Sawyers, Mulmur. The deceased was a member of Court Shelburne, No. 45, Independent Order of Foresters, and Stanton L.O. L. No. 61. The remains were interred in the Presbyterian Cemetery at Mansfield, the funeral being largely attended by old friends and neighbors.

Peel County Licenses.

The annual meeting of the License Commissioners for Peel County was held in the Court House in Brampton on Wednesday afternoon, April 8th. Eight applications for licenses were considered, the applicants being Ed. Carr amd W. H. Kumph, of Streetsville; P. J. Lanphier, of Erindale; P. Long, of Port Credit; George Bowers, of Cooksville; Wm. Royce, of Meadowvale, J. O'Connor, of Malton, and J. Osborne, of Claireville. There were also applications from the Caledon Mountain Trout Club signed by Lloyd Harris and J. W. Widdup, from the Toronto Golf Club, Chas. H. Little, secretary; from the Lakeview Golf and Country Club, Chas. Armitage, secretary; these three clubs having had licenses during the past year. There was also an application from the Mississauga Golf Club.

The commissioners decided to give the applicants who formerly had licenses three months' time to sell out. The application of the Mississauga Club was not considered. The applicants for Club licenses raised the point that they had nothing whatever to do with any bargain made by Mr. Haverson on behalf of the liquor dealers or by Mr. Spence on behalf of the temperance people and were therefore entitled to a license for the year pending the coming into force of the Canada Temperance Act for the year 1915. The commissioners did not see it that way and decided to treat all licenses alike.

At the Annual Meeting of the Provincial Scout Council, Rev. Geo. W. Tebbs was elected to the Executive Provincial Board, and Col. J. A. V. Preston to the Provincial Council. At the same meeting a very hearty vote of thanks was tendered the Orangeville Press for their kindness in giving publicity to the movement.

THIS NEW MEDICINE SAVES YOU MONEY

We are druggists right here in your town and make a living out of the drug business, and it is because people have to have drugs and not because we like to see people suffer — we don't. Our duty is to render the best service we can, and when someone is ailing, we are interested in seeing them take the best medicine there is for their particular trouble. We don't recommend "cure-alls," as we don't believe there are such things. We don't want you to spend more than you have to. Some of you get small wages, and when you're sick, none at all, and you should get the most you can for your money.

We recently came across a new remedy for increasing strength and building up people who are run-down and emaciated. We know that a slight trouble sometimes grows into a serious one, and to stop it in the beginning, will save you money in the end. This new compound is called Rexall Olive Oil Emulsion. It is the best remedy, when you are run down, tired out, nervous—no matter what the cause. It doesn't merely stimulate you and make you feel good for a few hours, but takes hold of the weakness and builds you up to a healthy, normal condition. It is a real nerve-food tonic and builder of good blood, strong muscle, good digestion. It contains Hypophosphites, which tone the nerves, and pure Olive Oil, which nourishes the nerves, the blood and the entire system. Pleasant to take. Contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs. We promise that if you are not perfectly satisfied with it, we'll give back your money as soon as you tell us. Sold only at the 7,000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only by us. $1.00. T. F. & T. J. Brown, Druggists, Orangeville.

Jeffers, the druggist, has the sole agency for Spalding's sporting goods. Ask about them.

BLOCKED BY ICE.

The following clipping from the Detroit Free Press of April 10th will interest the many local friends of Capt. W. G. Adams:—

"Somewhere between the Old Club and Joe Bedore's place at St. Clair Flats, the White Star line steamer Wauketa, with Captain W. G. Adams in command, was battling with the ice, Thursday night, trying to break her way through to Algonac.

The Wauketa left Detroit Thursday morning with a large cargo of freight and a number of passengers, among whom were J. T. McMillan, general superintendent of the D. & C. and others bound for the hunting and fishing club on the Canadian side, opposite Muir's landing.

The steamer succeeded in making her way through the canal and proceeded as far as Muir's, where Captain Adams decided further progress through the ice would be impossible. Starting back the steamer started to return to Detroit, but it was found that the canal had again become blocked with heavy ice and she stopped at the Old Club.

Charles F. Bielman, secretary and general manager of the line, was informed by Captain Adams, over the long distance telephone, about 7 o'clock Thursday night that the steamer would try to reach Algonac and that the passengers would remain on the ship, whether she went through or came back.

Vessels which were held in the ice at the St. Clair Flats canal, Wednesday, made their way out during the short time the channel was open Thursday morning. Some of the masses of ice in the canal and the river above are described as being at least thirty feet thick.

Mrs. Dorrance's Reception.

A first reception was held by Mrs. H. A. Dorrance (nee Edna Campbell) at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Campbell, in York St. on Tuesday afternoon. A large number of our ladies took occasion to call on this popular bride, who was gowned in her simple wedding dress of white satin with shadow lace. She was assisted in receiving her callers by her mother, Mrs. G. A. Campbell, in black silk with lace trimming and her sister, Mrs. Lorne Poapst, of Ottawa, in blue brocaded satin. The living room was prettily decorated with pink roses and in the tea room the color scheme was carried out in purple and yellow, with a profuse mass of daffodils centreing the table. Mrs. John Smith served the tea and Mrs. Godfrey Campbell, of Markdale, cut the ices. They were assisted by Miss Brooks, Miss Stella Campbell and Miss Allen. Little Miss Alice McGuire attended the door. Miss Henrietta Wallace at the piano added not a little to the enjoyment of the afternoon.

Hanna-Innis.

A very pretty Easter wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Innis, of Mono Road, on Wednesday, April 8th, when their daughter, Florence Margaret, was united in marriage to Mr. William Alexander Hanna, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hanna, of Mono Road. Rev. W. E. Wallace performed the ceremony. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore an ivory charmeuse gown with tunic of chiffon. Her veil was arranged in mob cap effect with lillies of the valley and she carried a bouquet of bridal roses and lillies of the valley. She wore the groom's gift—a necklace set with pearls and peridots. Little Mary McElwain and Ida Irwin, wearing embroidered voile frocks, attended the bride. The groom's gifts to them were ruby rings. Miss Annie Hanna played the wedding music. The drawing room was decorated with Easter lillies and ferns. Later Mr. and Mrs. Hanna left for Buffalo and New York, the latter wearing her going away suit of navy blue serge with hat to match. On their return they will reside in Toronto.

Death of Mrs. Shields.

On Friday, April 3rd, death removed from our community, in the person of Mrs. S. H. Shields, one of its best and most highly respected citizens. Mrs. Shields, who was the daughter of the late William Johnston, was born in Dufferin County on Feb. 9th, 1871. She received her education at one of the public schools in Mono township and later at Orangeville High School where she graduated as school teacher in 1890. She taught school at Decew Falls in Welland County for two years and in 1898 was married to Mr. Shields. The young couple took up their abode in Mono township where they lived until moving to their present home some eight years since. About 20 years ago she united with the Methodist Church, of which she has been a consistent member. She has been in illhealth for some time and on the 26th of March underwent a very serious operation, but gave promise of a speedy recovery, until the afternoon preceding her death when her illness took a serious turn and she sank rapidly, passing away in the early morning hours. She leaves to mourn her demise, a sorrowing husband, two daughters, Camille and Oro, aged eleven and eight respectively; a brother William H. Johnston, of this vicinity, and a community of friends and neighbors to whom she had endeared herself by her quiet unassuming manner and sterling qualities.—Beamsville Express.

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lovell, Agassiz, B.C., writes: "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicine. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

THAT SAP BOILING.

Boys Write a Letter in Extenuation of their Offence.

Mono Mills, April 13th, 1914.
Editor of the Orangeville Banner:

Dear Sir:

In the correspondence from Mono Mills in last week's Banner, the correspondent gave a dramatic account of a taffy pull in Mr. Darraugh's bush. In all fairness to those whom he terms the bunch, his account calls for a short reply, for which we hope, Mr. Editor, you will grant us the use of a little space in your valuable paper. Now, we all know what a taffy pull means and how often it occurs at this time of year and that so long as no damage is done, no respectable neighbor would think anything more about it. The correspondent states that there were three barrels of sap boiled down. Now this is a libellous statement, as anybody with a knowledge of sap making will know. Imagine boiling three barrels with one sugar kettle in three or four hours. Now, which is the greater crime—to cause a libellous statement like this to be published or to boil less than one barrel of sap to have a taffy pull. Let the public judge! Then the correspondent boasts that the bunch was glad to settle. But let us state that it would not have been settled only that we learned that it was Mrs. Darraugh, who had slushed through the bush herself to gather the sap to have some syrup for the table. They considered it too bad on her account and when it was settled Mr. Darraugh agreed that he would not say any more about the matter to anybody. If your correspondent is greatly tempted to publish the names of the bunch he is at liberty to do so. It seems to the neighborhood that Darraugh must have been hard pushed for ready cash, or he would not have charged the boys such an enormous price for their bit of fun. Why, even the neighbors' dinner bells rang to think that the boys were having such a joyous time. Hoping, Mr. Editor, that we have not taken up too much space, we remain

THE BUNCH.

Mrs. Harry Dewar Dead.

The death of Agnes Richardson, wife of Mr. Edward Henry Dewar, publisher of the Harriston Review, took place in the Royal Alexandra Hospital in Fergus on Saturday morning. The deceased, who was a woman of exemplary character, was the only daughter of the late Robert Richardson, of Minto township. She is survived by her husband, one son, Robert L., her mother and two brothers, Thomas, of Minto, and James in Harriston. The funeral, which was private, was held to Harriston cemetery on Monday afternoon. Editor Dewar will have the sympathy of many newspaper friends in his bereavement.

Death of George Rutledge.

George Rutledge, a former resident of Mulmur, died at his residence near Mono Centre on Sunday, April 5th, at the age of 69 years. The funeral was held on Tuesday following his death, the remains being interred in the Methodist cemetery at Whitfield. T. G. Rutledge, Orangeville, and Wesley Rutledge, Mono Centre, are the surviving sons. There are three daughters, namely, Mrs. Douglas Bell, Primrose, Mrs. Alfred Bell, Violet Hill, and Mrs. George Noble, Swift Current, Sask. Messrs. Wm. and Nixon Rutledge, of Shelburne, and Joseph Rutledge, of Stanton, are brothers.

Mrs. David Johnston.

The death of Mrs. Johnston, widow of the late David Johnston, one of the early settlers of the township, took place at her home, lot 15, con. 1, Amaranth, on Saturday, at the ripe age of 84 years. Mr. W. T. Johnston, of Whittington, a well-known Amaranth farmer, is a son. The funeral was held to Greenwood cemetery on Monday afternoon, when a large number of neighbors and friends followed the remains to their last resting place. A fuller notice is unavoidably held over until next week.

Mrs. J. J. Still Dead.

The Banner received a telegram yesterday, sent by Mr. J. J. Still from Pasadena, Cal., conveying the sad news of the death of Mrs. Still on Saturday evening. The remains are being brought to Orangeville for burial and it is expected that they will reach here in time to hold the funeral next Wednesday. Mr. and Mrs. Still resided on Zina St. for a number of years and will be well remembered by many of our readers. Mrs. Still, who was in the prime of life, was the only daughter of the late Wm. Young, York St. She was a very fine woman, a gifted singer and during her residence here was an active worker in St. Andrew's Church. Her friends here will keenly regret her demise. Profound sympathy will also be felt for the husband in his trying bereavement. The deceased visited Orangeville friends about Christmas time shortly before leaving with her husband for California, where they had planned to spend the winter. Since leaving Orangeville Mr. and Mrs. Still have lived in Toronto except when away travelling.

Toronto Y. M. C. A.

The Central Branch of the Toronto Young Men's Christian Association is carrying on an active work for young men who are strangers in Toronto. Outstanding men are secured in every church who make it a personal matter to call upon strangers whose names are given them by the Y.M. C.A.

One young man from Eastern Ontario was invited by one of the Key-men in Toronto to visit his church. He went, and joined the Sunday Morning Class. He later took a definite stand for the Christian life and is now a member of the church and an active worker in the Young Men's Bible Class. Another young man from a distant point was visited by a Key-man and as a result the young man, as well as his father and mother, were united with the church.

Thousands of these names are secured from Immigration Secretaries and from Key-men in municipalities throughout the Province from time to time. This is a good work and one in which every right minded man should be interested.

This Boy Had Fits For Six Years

Two best doctors gave him up
Wonderful Cure effected by Dr. Chases Nerve Food

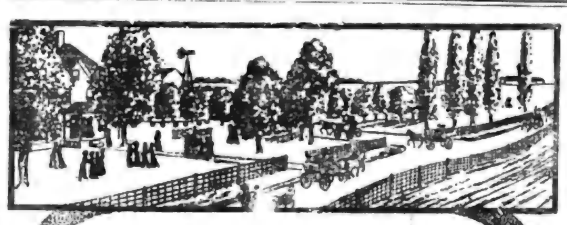
This Letter Tells the Story

Mrs. J. D. Palmer, 38 Park Street, Amsterdam, N.Y., writes:—"When six years of age my boy began to have fits. They came on in the night. He would make strange noises, stiffen out, froth at mouth, face would twitch and sometimes turned purple. After the fit he could not talk.

"The family physician said all he could do was to keep them down somewhat. The second physician pronounced trouble Jeffersonian epilepsy, but could not cure him. He suffered for six years and before beginning the use of DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD had three fits in about five days. Our druggist recommended DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD. He has taken seven boxes and has not had the symptom of a fit since beginning this treatment five months ago. His color has greatly improved; he is not nervous and irritable like he used to be, and we consider his cure a most remarkable one."

Makes Puny Children Strong and Robust

Epilepsy is a form of nervous exhaustion and disappears when the vigor of the nervous system is restored. Such symptoms as headache, dizziness, ringing in the ears, irritability of temper and specks before the eyes give warning of danger ahead. It may be paralysis, epilepsy or some other form of nervous collapse. The warning tells you that such restorative treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is necessary to revitalize the feeble, wasted nerve cells, to fill the system with vigor and ward off dangerous disease.



Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is so mild and gentle in action and at the same time so powerful in its reconstructive influence that it is admirably suited as a means of restoring pale, weak, nervous children to health and vigor. Such ailments as Ricketts and St. Vitus' Dance are overcome and vitality is so increased that trouble from indigestion, headaches and weak eyes disappear.

This food cure is a wonderful help during the growing period when physiological changes are taking place and when school work is particularly trying on the nervous system. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Write for free booklet on "The Nerves."

THE BOY AND THE FARM.

We have published several letters recently dealing with the big question of keeping the boy on the farm. It is a live topic just now, and we would appreciate having more letters on it. There is nothing to be gained by abusing the present day boy and stating that he is not as good as the boy of a generation ago. Conditions have materially changed during the past twenty-five years. The city and town have become stronger drawing cards than a few years back, and it requires more than hard work with a prospect of the boy eventually coming into the old homestead to keep him contented on the farm. We do not think, other things being equal, there is any greater desire on the part of the boy to leave the farm than was the case a generation ago. It is just the lure of the city that is stronger, that's all. The boy, however, is more needed on the farm to-day than he was in the old days when labor was plentiful, and farmers sons were looking for places. Consequently every legitimate effort should be made to keep the boy on the farm. Forcing a boy to stay against his own will or inclination is not legitimate effort. The thing to do is to make conditions on the farm, and in the country such that he will be loth to leave and will want to remain at all hazards. And this is the problem the farmer has to face, so far as keeping the boy on the land is concerned. We do not think it is hard work that scares the boy away. It is the lack of opportunities for developing and giving play to the social side of his nature. Man is a two-sided creature. He has the capacity for work and taking his place among life's activities. He also has a capacity for enjoyment and taking some pleasure out of life as he goes along. In the boy this latter faculty stands out more prominently than when he grows older, and must be catered to.—Canadian Farm.

Good Roads Improve Social Conditions

NO matter what your station in life or where you live, a certain amount of your time must be spent in pleasure to make life worth the living, and to obtain that pleasure you go to town or to your neighbors - especially is this true when living in the country.

Good Roads enable you to get into town or to your neighbors quicker, more often and without you or your horses or vehicles being covered with mud, and without regard to weather conditions or season. They enable your family physician to get to you quickly in times of illness. They enable your children to "foot it" to school every school-day. They keep your boys and girls on the farm by giving them better conditions generally.

Concrete Roads

are "every-day" roads—they have no "closed season" because they are open to traffic every day in the year. They are the most economical roads because they reduce the cost of maintenance to the minimum. They are easy of traction, clean, hard and free of ruts and holes. They keep your road money out of the mud.

FOR GOOD ROADS.

Highways Commission Recommends Expenditure of $30,000,000.

Money to be Contributed by Province, Counties and Cities.

A capital expenditure of $30,000,000 on Ontario Roads is recommended by the Public Roads and Highways Commission, which was appointed on July 31st to consider and formulate a plan for comprehensive highway improvement in Ontario. Of this large sum, the Commission suggests that the Province shall contribute $12,000,000, the counties $12,000,000 and the cities $6,000,000. The expenditure is to be made gradually, extending over a period of 15 years from 1915 until 1930.

Highways, the report points out, naturally fall into two main divisions, viz.: (1) county or market roads, and (2) township roads.

The county or market roads are classified into suburban, interurban, and rural. The suburban roads should be maintained by the Provincial department in co-operation with the local authorities. Cities should contribute thirty per cent. towards the cost of constructing such roads and thirty-three and a third per cent. towards their maintenance. The remaining construction charges should be thirty per cent. for the county and forty per cent. for the Province. If the cost of construction exceeds $10,000 per mile the excess should be met by local improvement charges.

Interurban roads should be apportioned as to cost, thirty-three and one-third per cent. by the county and sixty-six and two thirds by the Province, and the maintenance forty per cent. by the county and sixty per cent. by the Province. The projected trunk roads from Toronto to Hamilton and Hamilton to Queenstown are exempted from this classification and are rated as surburban roads.

The rural roads should remain under the control of the County Councils or a permanent Commission, and the charge of construction should be borne forty per cent. by the county and sixty per cent. by the Province.

In regard to township roads the Commission recommends that these should remain entirely in the hands of the local Councils. It is suggested that the Province should expend $250,000 on these roads annually for three years, apportioning $50,000 on the basis of assessment, $50,000 on the basis of population, and $150,000 on the basis of area, on the condition that each township spend at least $4 for every $1 contributed by the Province, that proper drainage be installed, roads should be dragged, and statute labor abolished or commuted, and a proper road organization should be established.

The Commission expresses the belief that one of the most important problems to be dealt with is that of bringing 42,500 miles of township roads to a reasonably fair standard, and of fitting 7,500 miles of country roads to bear the severe demands made upon them by mixed local and through traffic.

The Commission also suggests an increased motor tax, which it is estimated will probably increase the Provincial revenue to the amount of $400,000. The following basis for the tax is recommended:—

Automobiles—Up to 20 horsepower, $10 per car; 21 to 30 horsepower, 50c per horsepower; 31 to 40 horsepower, 60c per horsepower; 41 to 56 horsepower, 75c per horsepower; over 56 horsepower, $1 per horsepower.

Trucks—Two tons and less, $10 per car; over two tons, $5 per ton.

Motorcycles—$4 uniformly.

Foreign touring cars and trucks—$10 uniformly.

A synopsis of the Commission's recommendations was given the Legislature by Hon. J. O. Reaume, Minister of Public Works, on Tuesday of last week. The full report is in the hands of the printer and will not be available for some days yet.

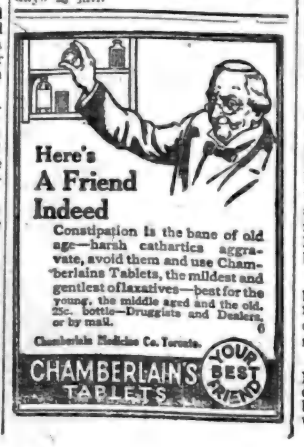
Why This Manitoba Lady Recommends Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Bourbonierre had many troubles, all of Which were Caused by Sick Kidneys, and She Found a Simple and Complete Cure.

St. Rose du Lac, Man. Apr. 13th. (Special)—Mrs. D. J. Bourbonierre, an estimable lady of this place, is losing no opportunity to praise Dodd's Kidney Pills to her friends. And she has a reason. Here it is in her own words.



"I suffered very much from my Kidneys," Mrs. Bourbonierre says. "I was tired and nervous, my appetite was uncertain and my memory was failing. I had heart flutterings, my back was sore and I was troubled with headaches. Rheumatism was finally added to my sufferings and I was in a bad way indeed.

"I tried one medicine, but it did me no good, and then I was advised to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I am very glad that I did, for now after taking four boxes I am a well woman again."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cured Mrs. Bourbonierre because all her troubles came from sick Kidneys. Sick Kidneys cannot do their work of straining the impurities out of the blood, and the result is sickness, depression and lassitude all over the body. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured the Kidneys; the purified blood did the rest.

The Tree with a Future.

There are trees in Canada whose commercial importance is clearly on the wane. According to one of the latest bulletins of the Dominion Forestry Branch, the value of the white pine lumber cut in 1912 was one and a half million dollars less than in 1911. The cut of hemlock decreased thirty per cent.; that of cedar decreased twenty-seven per cent. and tamarack, the lumber production of which has decreased over forty per cent. in the last two years, bids fair soon to become commercially extinct. Of the six leading tree-species in Canada, Douglas fir was the only one whose lumber production increased in 1912. In the province of British Columbia alone, Douglas fir formed over 67.7 per cent. of the total lumber cut, and British Columbia is at present by far the richest province in Canada, containing, according to some estimates, one-half the merchantable timber wealth in the Dominion.

This remarkable tree attains a height of over two hundred feet with a trunk ten to twelve feet in diameter, forming, alone or mixed with hemlock, great forests extending four hundred miles north of the International boundary. Its natural range extends in Canada to the eastern foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains in Alberta, where it grows to a height of 130 feet and a diameter of four feet, and is considered one of the most important timber trees on the Dominion Rocky Mountains Forest Reserve, which covers an area of nearly 21,000 square miles.

It is also widely distributed throughout the western United States, being able to stand considerable climatic variation and being practically immune to insects or fungus diseases.

Dr. Sargent, one of the greatest authorities on American trees, describes the wood as hard, durable, and largely used for all kinds of construction. According to a recent Dominion Forestry Branch publication on the "Wood-using Industries of Ontario," it is increasing in popularity in that province for decorative purposes as "it has an attractive grain and figure which readily lends itself to staining." Douglas fir construction timber is shipped to all parts of the world.

The Douglas fir has been introduced into Europe with great success and large forests have been planted which are now yielding handsome profits. Germany and France purchase every year large quantities of seed from the Indians in British Columbia.

Call and leave your order for a "Progress Brand" Suit at J. D. Torrie's.

The public should take notice that by a recent amendment to the Statutes all commuted Statute Labor will be $1.50 per day instead of $1.00 as heretofore.

The death occurred in Arthur on March 29th, of Thomas Eaton, aged 73 years and 4 months. Deceased was father of Mrs. John Baird and Mrs. R. W. Philip, formerly of Grand Valley.

I give you permission to publish what your good medicine has done for me."—Mrs. SIMON DOUCETTE, Belleville, Yarmouth Co., Nova Scotia, Canada.

DOUGLAS FIR.

The Tree with a Future.

There are trees in Canada whose commercial importance is clearly on the wane. According to one of the latest bulletins of the Dominion Forestry Branch, the value of the white pine lumber cut in 1912 was one and a half million dollars less than in 1911. The cut of hemlock decreased thirty per cent.; that of cedar decreased twenty-seven per cent. and tamarack, the lumber production of which has decreased over forty per cent. in the last two years, bids fair soon to become commercially extinct. Of the six leading tree-species in Canada, Douglas fir was the only one whose lumber production increased in 1912. In the province of British Columbia alone, Douglas fir formed over 67.7 per cent. of the total lumber cut, and British Columbia is at present by far the richest province in Canada, containing, according to some estimates, one-half the merchantable timber wealth in the Dominion.

This remarkable tree attains a height of over two hundred feet with a trunk ten to twelve feet in diameter, forming, alone or mixed with hemlock, great forests extending four hundred miles north of the International boundary. Its natural range extends in Canada to the eastern foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains in Alberta, where it grows to a height of 130 feet and a diameter of four feet, and is considered one of the most important timber trees on the Dominion Rocky Mountains Forest Reserve, which covers an area of nearly 21,000 square miles.

It is also widely distributed throughout the western United States, being able to stand considerable climatic variation and being practically immune to insects or fungus diseases.

Dr. Sargent, one of the greatest authorities on American trees, describes the wood as hard, durable, and largely used for all kinds of construction. According to a recent Dominion Forestry Branch publication on the "Wood-using Industries of Ontario," it is increasing in popularity in that province for decorative purposes as "it has an attractive grain and figure which readily lends itself to staining." Douglas fir construction timber is shipped to all parts of the world.

The Douglas fir has been introduced into Europe with great success and large forests have been planted which are now yielding handsome profits. Germany and France purchase every year large quantities of seed from the Indians in British Columbia.

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER VI.—continued.

The official shrugged his shoulders.

"You decline to help us in any way, then," he said. "Remember that the man will probably die. He had little money about him, and unless friends come to his aid he must be treated as a pauper."

"I do not wish to seem unfeeling," Anna said, slowly, "but I can only repeat that I am absolutely without concern in the matter. The man is a stranger to me."

The official had no more to say. Only it was with a further and most unbelieving shrug of the shoulders that he resumed his seat.

"You will be so good as to leave your correct name and address, mademoiselle," he said curtly.

"You have them both," Anna answered.

He opened the door for her with a faint disagreeable smile.

"It is possible, mademoiselle," he said, "that this affair is not yet ended. It may yet bring us together again."

She passed out without reply. Yet she took with her an uneasy consciousness that in this affair might lie the germs of future trouble.

As she crossed the square, almost within a stone's throw of her lodgings, she came face to face with Courtlaw. He stopped short with a little exclamation of surprise.

"My dear friend," she laughed, "not so tragic, if you please."

He recovered himself.

"I was surprised, I admit," he said, "You did not tell me that you were going out, or I would have offered my escort. Do you know how late it is?"

She nodded.

"I heard the clock strike as I crossed the square," she answered. "I was sent for to go to the Hospital St. Denis. But what are you doing here?"

"Old Pere Ruseval met me on your doorstep, and he would not let me go. I have been sitting with him ever since. The Hospital St. Denis, did you say? I hope that no one of our friends has met with an accident."

She shook her head.

"They wanted me to identify some one whom I had certainly never seen before in my life, and to tell you the truth, they were positively rude to me because I could not. Have you ever heard the name of Meysey Hill?"

"Meysey Hill?" He repeated it after her, and she knew at once from his tone and his quick glance into her face that the name possessed some significance for him.

"Yes I have heard of him, and I know him by sight," he admitted. "He was a friend of your sister's, was he not?"

"I never heard her mention his name," she answered. "Still, of course, it is possible. This man was apparently not sure whether he was Meysey Hill or not."

"How long had he been in the hospital?" Courtlaw asked.

"Since last night."

"Then, whoever he may be, he is not Meysey Hill," Courtlaw said. "That young man was giving a luncheon party to a dozen friends at the Cafe de Paris to-day. I sat within a few feet of him. I feel almost inclined to regret the fact."

"Why?" she asked.

"If one half of the stories about Meysey Hill are true," he answered, "I would not stretch out my little finger to save his life."

"Isn't that a little extreme?"

"I am an extreme person at times. This man has an evil reputation. I know of scandalous deeds which he has done."

Anna had reached the house where she lodged, but she hesitated on the doorstep.

"Have you ever seen Annabel with him?" she asked.

"Never."

"It is odd that this man at the hospital should call himself Meysey Hill," she remarked.

"If you wish," he said, "I will go there in the morning and see what can be done for him."

"It would be very kind of you," she declared. "I am only sorry that I did not ask you to go with me."

She rang the bell, and he waited by her side until she was admitted to the tall, gloomy lodging house. And ever after it struck him that her backward smile as she disappeared was charged with some special significance. The door closed upon her, and he moved reluctantly away. When next he asked for her, some twelve hours later, he was told that Mademoiselle had left. His most eager inquiries and most lavish bribes could gain no further information than that she had left for England, and that her address was — London.

CHAPTER VII.

Miss Pellissier's Suspicions.

"Anna!"

Anna kissed her sister and nodded to her aunt. Then she sat down—uninvited—and looked from one to the other curiously. There was something about their greeting and the tone of Annabel's exclamation which puzzled her.

"I wish," she said, "that you would leave off looking at me as though I were something grisly. I am your very dutiful niece, aunt, and your most devoted sister, Annabel. I haven't murdered any one, or broken the law in any way that I know of. Perhaps you will explain the state of panic into which I seem to have thrown you."

Annabel, who was looking very well, and who was most becomingly dressed, moved to a seat from which she could command a view of the road outside. She was the first to recover herself. Her aunt, a faded, anaemic looking lady of somewhat too obtrusive gentility, was still sitting with her hand pressed to her heart.

Annabel looked up and down the empty street, and then turned to her sister.

"For one thing, Anna," she remarked, "we had not the slighest idea that you had left, or were leaving Paris. You did not say a word about it last week, nor have you written. It is quite a descent from the clouds, isn't it?"

"I will accept that," Anna said, "as accounting for the surprise. Perhaps you will now explain the alarm."

Miss Pellissier was beginning to recover herself. She too at once developed an anxious interest in the street outside.

"I am sure, Anna," she said. "I do not see why we should conceal the truth from you. We are expecting a visit from Sir John Ferringhall at any moment. He is coming to tea."

"Well?" Anna remarked calmly.

Anna drummed impatiently with her fingers against the arm of her chair.

Miss Pellissier stiffened visibly.

"This is not a matter altogether for levity, Anna," she said. "Your sister's future is at stake. I imagine that even you must realize that this is of some importance."

Anna glanced towards her sister, but the latter avoided her eyes.

"I have always," she admitted calmly, "taken a certain amount of interest in Annabel's future. I should like to know how it is concerned with Sir John Ferringhall, and how my presence intervenes."

"Sir John," Miss Pellissier said impressively, "has asked your sister to be his wife. It is a most wonderful piece of good fortune, as I suppose you will be prepared to admit. The Ferringhalls are of course without any pretence at family, but Sir John is a very rich man, and will be able to give Annabel a very enviable position in the world. The settlements which he has spoken of, too, are most munificent. No wonder we are anxious that nothing should happen to make him change his mind."

"I still——"

Anna stopped short. Suddenly she understood. She grew perhaps a shade paler, and she glanced out into the street, where her four-wheeler cab, laden with luggage, was still waiting.

"Sir John of course disapproved of me," she remarked slowly.

"Sir John is a man of the world," her aunt answered coldly. "He naturally does not wish for connexions which are—I do not wish to hurt your feelings, Anna, but I must say it—not altogether desirable."

The irrepressible smile curved Anna's lips. She glanced towards her sister, and curiously enough found in her face some faint reflection of her own rather sombre mirth. She leaned back in her chair. It was in use. The smile had become a laugh. She laughed till the tears stood in her eyes.

"I had a visit from Sir John in my rooms," she said. "Did he tell you, Annabel?"

"Yes."

"He mentioned the matter to me also," Miss Pellissier remarked stiffly. "The visit seems to have made a most painful impression upon him. To tell you the truth, he spoke to me very seriously upon the subject."

Anna sprang up.

"I will be off," she declared. "My cab with all that luggage would give the whole show away. Good-bye, aunt."

Miss Pellissier tried ineffectually to conceal her relief.

"I do not like to seem inhospitable, Anna," she said hesitatingly. "And of course you are my niece just as Annabel is, although I am sorry to learn that your conduct has been much less discreet than hers. But at the same time, I must say plainly that I think your presence here just now would be a great misfortune. I wish very much that you had written before leaving Paris."

Anna nodded.

"Quite right," she said. "I ought to have done. Good-bye, aunt. I'll come and see you again later on. Annabel, come to the door with me," she added a little abruptly. "There is something which I must say to you."

Annabel rose and followed her sister from the room. A maid-servant held the front door open. Anna sent her away.

"Annabel," she said brusquely. "Listen to me."

"Well?"

"Sir John came to me—that you know—and you can guess what I told him. No, never mind about thanking me. I want to ask you a plain question, and you must answer me faithfully. Is all that folly done with—for ever?"

Annabel shivered ever so slightly.

"Of course it is, Anna. You ought to know that. I am going to make a fresh start."

"Be very sure that you do," Anna said slowly. "If I thought for a moment that there was any chance of a relapse, I should stop here and tell him the truth even now."

Annabel looked at her with terrified eyes.

"Anna," she cried, "you must believe me. I am really in earnest. I would not have him know—now—for the world."

"Very well," Anna said. "I will believe you. Remember that he's not at all a bad sort, and to speak frankly, he's your salvation. Try and let him never regret it. There's plenty to be got out of life in a decent sort of way. Be a good wife to him. You can if you will."

"I promise," Annabel declared. "He is very kind, Anna, really, and not half such a prig as he seems."

Anna moved towards the door, but her sister detained her.

"Won't you tell me why you have come to England?" she said. "It was such a surprise to see you. I thought that you loved Paris and your work so much."

A momentary bitterness crept into Anna's tone.

"I have made no progress with my work," she said slowly, "and the money was gone. I had to ask Mr. Courtlaw for his true verdict, and he gave it me. I have given up painting."

"Anna!"

"It is true, dear. After all there are other things. All that I regret are the wasted years, and I am not sure that I regret them. Only of course I must begin something else at once. That is why I came to London."

"But what are you going to do—where are you going to live?" Annabel asked. "Have you any money?"

"Lots," Anna answered laconically. "Never mind me. I always fall on my feet, you know."

"You will let us hear from you—let us know where you are, very soon?" Annabel called out from the step.

Anna nodded as she briskly crossed the pavement.

"Some day," she answered. "Run in now. There's a hansom coming round the corner."

Annabel disappeared precipitately. Miss Pellissier was standing at the window of her little drawing-room when her niece entered, watching the departing cab, and dabbing her eyes with a lavender perfumed handkerchief.

"She never looked back once, Annabel, not once," she exclaimed. "I waved my hand, too. Really, it is most unfortunate that she should come to London just now. It is evident too that she intended to stay here. Of course it was quite impossible, with Sir John here; so often, and feeling as he does about her. Did she tell you her plans, Annabel?"

The girl shook her head.

"I'm afraid she hasn't any. All the same I don't think that we need worry about her, aunt. Anna always falls on her feet. I never knew any one so capable of looking after herself."

"I am afraid Annabel," she said, "that you are inclined to be a selfish young woman."

Annabel shrugged her shoulders.

"I do not think that I am selfish in an ordinary way," she answered. "I simply do not worry about things. It really is not worth while, and makes one old and irritable. I would rather have Anna here—as she has to be in London—but as it is impossible I simply do not think about it. I suppose you are going to have a really enjoyable hour now, thinking how many scrapes she can possibly get into. Every one to their taste of course. It simply wouldn't suit me."

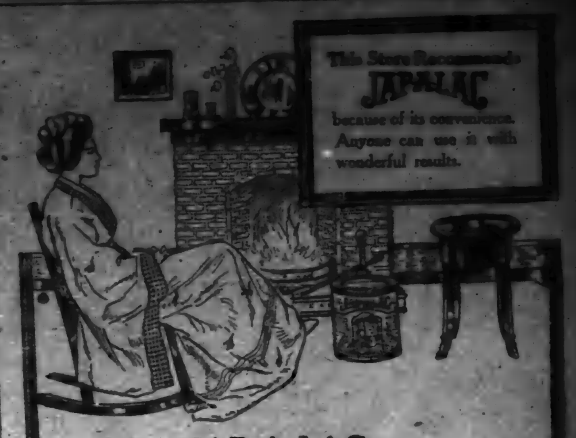
THREE FAMOUS SCIENTISTS



Dr. Andrew Wilson, Dr. Gordon Stables and Dr. Lascelles Scott, the famous English analyst, have all personally tried Zam-Buk and expressed themselves convinced of its great healing value.

Mrs. St. Denis, of Thompson St., Weston, Winnipeg, suffered long with eczema; and finally her doctor said only Zam-Buk could cure her—another fine tribute of a scientific man to this great herbal healer.

Mrs. St. Denis says: "The eczema broke out on my nose and one side of my face. I could get no sleep because of the irritation and pain, and my face was in such a shocking condition that for two months I did not go out of the house. I applied remedies and my doctor treated me, but without effect, until one day he said that the only thing which would be likely to cure me was Zam-Buk. I procured a supply and, to cut a long story short, in a few weeks Zam-Buk cured me completely, leaving no scars."

Zam-Buk is a sure cure for cuts, scalds, burns, eczema, scalp sores, ulceration, inflammation, piles, etc.; also as an embrocation for rheumatism, sprains and sciatica. All druggists and stores at 50c. box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price. Refuse harmful substitutes.

Almost always the woman or man whose hair is falling out, or is stringy, lifeless and dull looking, is entirely to blame because of not giving it proper care. It is easy to take care of the hair. Sprinkle a little on your hair each time before brushing it. Contains no oil, and will not change color of hair, nor darken gray hair.

To keep your hair and scalp dandruff-free and clean, use Harmony Shampoo. Platt-Anderson.

A quiet wedding took place at the parsonage on Thursday afternoon, April 9th, when Samuel I. Platt and Miss A. J. Anderson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Anderson, were united in matrimony. The bride and groom are both residents of the township of Garafraxa. The ceremony was performed by Rev. G. W. Robinson.

Wallace-McComb.

A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mrs. James McComb, Melancthon, when her daughter, Martha, became the bride of Benjamin Wallace, son of the late Thomas Wallace, of Melancthon. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. C. Otton, of Corbetton, in the presence of the immediate friends of the contracting parties. Precisely at two o'clock the bride entered the drawing room on the arm of her brother, T. A. McComb, of Orrville, and took her place beside the groom under an arch of evergreen and wedding bells, where the nuptial knot was tied. After the ceremony and hearty congratulations the guests repaired to the dining room, where a sumptuous dinner was served. Rev. C. C. Otton proposed the toast to the bride, and T. A. McComb responded on behalf of the groom and the bride's mother. The happy couple left on the evening train amid showers of confetti and good wishes for Toronto, Erie and other American points. On their return they will reside on the groom's farm on the Back Line. The Free Press joins in wishing them a happy journey through life.—Free Press.

The Fire Brigade Concert.

A fair sized audience attended the Fire Brigade concert in the Opera House on Tuesday night. The greater part of the programme consisted of playlets, sketches and comediettas by Miss Lucy Wehling, an English comedienne, advertised as the original "Little Lord Fauntleroy" of the English stage and Mr. Walter McRaye, an entertainer, who has achieved some prominence as an interpreter of Dr. Drummond's habitant sketches. Messrs. J. E. Jessop and Percy Harding contributed to the programme, the former singing "The Wolf" by Shield and the latter "Ah Che La Morte Ogna" from Il Trovatore. Messrs. Jessop and Harding were also heard to advantage in a duet "Two Jolly Beggars" by Lane Wilson.

Athletic Notes.

A nation wide campaign has been commenced to revive lacrosse and every lover of clean sport, with red blood in his veins, should put his shoulder to the wheel and help along. As far as Orangeville is concerned there need be no alarm as to support, as there is no better lacrosse town in the country. There is no summer game that makes stronger appeal to the enthusiasm of the spectators than does lacrosse, and on this account it is well worth rescuing from the decadence into which it has fallen.

As far as the players are concerned lacrosse is a strenuous game. It requires not only the physical qualities of speed and strength and endurance, but the moral qualities of fearlessness, quick thinking and patience under difficulties. These qualities, both moral and physical, are necessary to the upbuilding of a nation, and a game that fosters them is deserving of national support.

The annual Convention of the O. A. L. A. took place in Toronto last Friday. The Dufferins were represented by Dr. Campbell, B. McGuire and A. A. Smith. The last named, we are pleased to add, was a successful candidate for the Council. Mr. Smith is energetic, enthusiastic and progressive in his ideas and will undoubtedly make a useful man on the Council.

The Good Friday Convention was the largest and most enthusiastic held in years. This augurs well for a grand revival of the good game. The daily papers have given good reports of the various amendments carried, the only one affecting the local club being the reduction of teams from twelve to ten men and the shortening of the field to 100 yards. This will be tried out for this year, the fathers of the movement claiming that on the smaller field better and faster lacrosse will be played ; that the referee can watch the play better and consequently cleaner games will be the result, also that the field can be be brought closer to the spectators, making the game more interesting for them. It is also claimed that the smaller towns can get teams of ten men much easier than twelve and this will encourage them to get in line.

The town league promises to flourish stronger than ever this year and it is the intention of the management to give the boys every encouragement. All boys of any age who desire to get into the game will kindly hand their names to the Secretary, or to H. Keith, D. Patterson or "Jimmie" Dawson at once and a place on a team will be allotted them. As soon as the weather permits the games will be pulled off.

A baseball club has been organized in Shelburne with the following officers :—Hon. pres., John Best, M.P. ; pres., F. H. Silk ; vice-pres., R. J. Puckering ; sec.-treas., R. W. Brett ; manager, D. Henderson ; captain, H. D. Cameron ; committee, Thos. Whalley, Dr. R. E. Davis, Chas. Doan ; finance committee, T. J. Harrison, E. A. Ferguson ; grounds committee, S. H. Rutledge, Gib. Richardson, I. E. Gallaugher. The Club is in favor of organizing a district. Two plans are suggested. One is to form a league consisting of Alton, Orangeville, Shelburne and Dundalk. The other advocates the formation of a purely Dufferin County League, including such teams as Shelburne, Grand Valley, Orangeville, Honeywood, Mansfield, Rocktown, Reddickville, Camilla and Laurel.

Hospital Notes

The hospital has received its first grant from the Government for the year ending Sept. 30th, 1913. The grant is estimated at a per diem rate based upon the number of days actual treatment and stay of each patient admitted to the hospital. It amounted to $362.65.

His financial success has not lessened his interest in the affairs of his home town and he was pleased to remember our hospital's many needs and to add his share to the fund. Lord Dufferin Chapter, Daughters of the Empire, appreciate Mr. Carson's good wishes and thank him most heartily for his liberal donation.

Chiropractor Now in Orangeville.

EASTER VESTRY MEETING.

St. Mark's Church Has Had a Successful Year.

The annual Vestry meeting of St. Mark's Church was held in the school room on Monday evening. An excellent year's work was reported and the affairs of the congregation are in a flourishing condition. The Rector, Rev. Geo. W. Tebbs, who presided, stated that he had received almost the whole amount of $2000 required for a new pipe organ from friends outside the Parish. It was unanimously decided to instal the new organ at as early a date as possible. During the year extensive improvements have been carried on and paid for. These include new furnaces, sidewalks and eavetroughing. The choir was vested for the first time at Christmas. Increased subscriptions were received during the year and there was a largely increased attendance at the ordinary services of the church. The Easter Day offertory, attendance and communicants present constituted a record.

All the organizations of the Church are in a flourishing condition, including three branches of the W. A. meeting weekly, a large A.Y.P.A. and a newly formed troop of Boy Scouts. Seventy persons were confirmed last year and the Rector has a 1914 class of 20 candidates to be presented to the Bishop on May 10th.

In connection with the church an excellent orchestra of 15 instruments has done good work.

Officers were elected as follows :—Mr. E. A. Robinson, Rector's Warden ; Mr. W. G. Hyland, People's Warden ; Col. J. A. V. Preston, Mr. W. E. SUCCESS IN RETAILING

An essential factor in achieving success in a retail business is ADVERTISING—telling the buyers of your community what you have for them.

One doesn't need to be exceptionally clever or a genius to be a success, but one must have an aim, and pursue it resolutely and intelligently.

The businesses that are prospering and expanding are those that purposefully seek out new customers and place before old and new customers the news of their service, in the form of newspaper advertising.

A Note to the Public

Who serve you best—busy or half-busy men?—busy or half-busy shops? Where is your custom most desired and appreciated? Is it not at those shops which stretch out the hand of welcome and invitation—in the form of advertisements in THE BANNER?

Makes Healthy Bowels

THIS simple rule of health is daily called attention to by every doctor in the land, whose first question to the patient almost invariably is, "Are your bowels regular?" Yet there's not one person in fifty who takes proper care of the bowels. And the result of this foolish neglect is nine-tenths of all ill-health.

If today you are unable to free your body of waste matter at the usual time, or if the act causes straining, pains and discomfort, don't let that condition occur again tomorrow. Unless your bowels can carry away the waste materials left after food is digested, decay sets in, the poisons of which, taken up by the blood, increase the risk of Typhoid Fever, Appendicitis, and many other serious diseases.

In treating constipation, there is a right way and a wrong way. The wrong way is to take harsh purgatives which even though they do clear the bowels, cause griping and nausea, injure the delicate tissues, and so disturb the normal functions as to cause the return of constipation. The right way is to help Nature to produce natural movement, without pain or discomfort, by using

Rexall Orderlies

More Than One Hundred Million Were Sold Last Year

This enormous quantity was used with good results by busy men who suffered from constipation, due to lack of exercise, or indigestion caused by overwork—by children whose parents realize the harmful effect of common purgatives—by old people whose systems cannot stand anything harsh—by women during pregnancy, and after childbirth, when any medicine with a violent action would be particularly dangerous. Many of these people are your neighbors and friends. Ask anyone who has ever used them—they'll tell you Rexall Orderlies satisfied and helped them.

—a gentle laxative in the form of a chocolate-tasting tablet. One of these tablets eaten just before going to bed will help to restore your bowels to normal activity at a time when, your body being at rest, the medicine can do its best work. As a result of taking that tablet (or say two, if your case is obstinate), your bowels will move easily and naturally in the morning. The use of Rexall Orderlies for a few days afterward will restore normal regularity. Even chronic constipation is benefited by them, and it is not necessary to continue the treatment for a long time, because, instead of driving Nature, they simply help her to help herself.

Invest pocket tin boxes, 10c, 25c, 50c

This Is Our Guarantee—You Risk No Money

If Rexall Orderlies do not make your bowels act right, tell us so and we'll give back your money without asking a single question. There is no red tape to this guarantee. It means just what it says. You sign nothing. We won't hesitate, or ask you any questions. Your word is enough. If Rexall Orderlies do not do all you expect them to—if you don't feel better after using them and find that they are the pleasantest-acting and best laxative you have ever used, we want you to tell us and get your money back.

VAGARIES OF EASTER.

Calendar Makers to Blame.

Lent began this year three weeks later than last year, being, of course, based upon the date of Easter, which is April 12th this year, as against March 23rd last year.

Very few people can tell why Lent varies from year to year and why Easter may come as early as March 22nd and as late as April 25th.

It is something of an anomaly from the religious point of view that the anniversary of Christ's death may fall on any one of the days, while the anniversary of His birth is always the same.

It is no less of an anomaly from the astronomical standpoint, for there seems no reason why we, having adopted the solar year as the basis of our calendar, should cling to the lunar year merely for the establishment of one date.

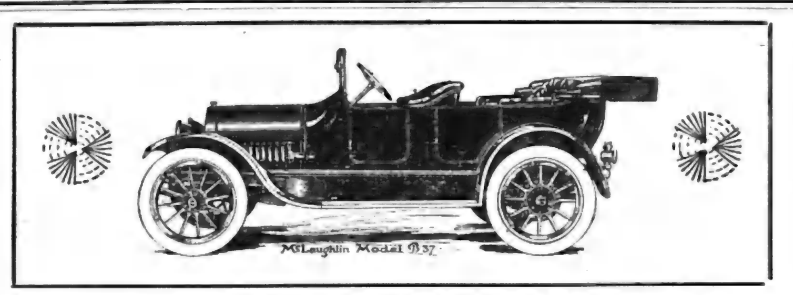
It is a mystery why, when the date of Christ's birth was fixed as December 25th, some dates in April were not at the time settled upon as those of His death and resurrection. That would have been logical and would have banished from the calendar a lunar cycle that has long been abandoned by all civilized peoples.

If Christ was crucified on the 14th day of March moon astronomers ought to be able to calculate on which date this fell. They say that in all probability it fell on April 7th of the year 30 of the Christian era. Why, then, not fix Easter once and for all as the Sunday after April 7th.

It is to the Council of Nice that we owe the perpetuation of our anachronistic record of reckoning Easter. This council decreed that it should be the first Sunday after the first full moon that occurs on or after the vernal equinox, March 21st.

Pope Gregory XIII. undertook at that time to reform the Julian calendar which had been in use ever since Julius Caesar, in 46 B.C., had prescribed that a year should consist of 365 days, every fourth year having 366.

This Julian calendar was a reform of a still more ancient system based upon the motions of the moon, which system varied widely in different lands. In Rome, it had originated with Romulus, who established a year of 10 months, having alternately 30 and 31 days, making 304 days in all. Numa Pompilius added the months of February and January and in the year 452 B.C. the Decemvirs placed them where they now are.



When Pope Gregory undertook to reform the Julian calendar, that had by that time become incorrect by about ten days, the revolution of the earth around the sun was not yet fully understood, so instead of making a change that would be thoroughly scientific, the present form of year was adopted, the Julian calendar being modified by calling October 5, 1582, October 15 and making all terminal years of centuries, 1700, 1800, 1900, etc., common years of 365 days, except when the year was a multiple of 400, and 1600, 2000, etc., which should be leap year.

In those days they were so accustomed to movable feasts that it never occurred to the reformers of the calendar a day might come when their movability would be inconvenient. They knew so little about the relations between the sun and the earth that they did not want to renounce the lunar year entirely and so upset the order of feast days that had from time immemorial been based upon the movements of the moon.

Though the Gegorian calendar was issued in 1582, prejudice against anything that came from Rome was so strong in England that it was not adopted there until by an act of Parliament, passed in 1752, 11 days were dropped from the calendar.

To fix one definite date for Easter would require from the Pope the issuance of an edict to that effect and the whole Catholic world and all Roman Catholics elsewhere would at once adopt it, and there is little doubt that the Protestant churches would follow. As it is a purely religious feast this is all that would be necessary.

In Russia and Greece the Julian calendar is still in use, so their dates are now 12 days different from ours.

KEPHALDOL

"IS ABSOLUTELY MARVELLOUS AS A PAIN KILLER."

Mrs. Beatrice Cassey, of Swalecliffe, England, knows what it means to be bed-ridden with pain. She also knows now how easily the tortures of Rheumatism and Lumbago may be overcome. She says, "My experience with KEPHALDOL as a painkiller is absolutely marvellous. I had a fearfully acute attack last year of Neuritis, Sciatica and Lumbago, and suffered in bed for many days. Finally, I heard of KEPHALDOL, which did wonders for me. I shall always feel most grateful for what it has done, and I am most happy to let others know of its wonderful effects as a pain destroyer."

KEPHALDOL is the only pain reliever that does not affect the heart. It acts directly on the nerve centres, easing and quieting the pain. KEPHALDOL is the favorite combination of nerve stimulants and tonics prescribed by the famous Doctor Stohr, of Vienna, the great nerve specialist.

KEPHALDOL is now sold in Canada by druggists in 50c tubes or may be had by sending 50c direct to Kephaldol Limited, 91 Latour St., Montreal.

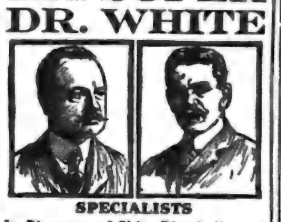
NEW MAIL BOXES.

New Style of Boxes for Rural Mail to be Ready June 15.

The manufacture of 100,000 special combined letter and parcel boxes for rural mail delivery will be commenced in Toronto immediately. The Dominion Government has awarded the contract for the supply of these boxes to the International Mail Equipment Co. of Canada, and by June 15, the first 10,000 boxes must be delivered.



The new boxes are similar in design to the rural mail boxes now in use, and are equipped with self-locking devices of same type. The difference is in size. The new boxes will be more than twice the dimensions of the old ones. Their price will be $4.25 apiece, as compared with $3.00. The original tender price was $4.50, but the company, considering the size of the order, cut 25 cents off this figure.

The boxes are of the same type as those made by the International Mail Equipment Co., of New York, which supplies the U.S. Parcels Post system. One clause of the contract with the Dominion Government, however, provided that the boxes should be made in Canada, and the International Mail Equipment Co. of Canada was organized. W. I. Banfield, of Banfield & Sons, machinists, of 122 Adelaide street, west, Toronto, is one of the directors of the Canadian company, but it is understood that a large block of the stock is held in the States and that of Canada is virtually a branch of the International Mail Equipment Co. of New York.

The first lot of 10,000 boxes, which must be delivered by June 15, will be manufactured at the factory of Banfield & Sons. The rest will be made in a new factory which is to be built at 138-140 Adelaide street, west, for which a permit was granted on March 12th. The new building is to be a five-storey affair and will cost $40,000. Application for the permit was made early in January. The contract with the Government was tentatively signed on February 28th.

Seven tenders in all were received for the mail boxes. Though that of the International Mail Box Co. was the highest, their boxes were considered to be so superior in design that the contract was awarded to them. The patent automatic self-lockers are an exclusive feature. The profits of the contract will be very large especially to the holders of the patent. Farmers owning small boxes of the old type will be permitted to exchange them for the new box on payment of $1.50 to Post-office Department.

OFF FOR THE NORTHLAND.

Now that the snow is running from the hills and warmer sunshine calls the birds from the south to return to our woods, other visitors who have stayed with us through the cold discomfort of winter are setting off for the north. The grosbeaks, the snowflakes, corn-bills and red-polls, must set off at once. Even the delicate kinglets with their crowns of gold are leaving before they have tasted the joys of our spring. They are the smallest of our birds, with the exception of the humming birds, and have stayed with us all winter, sometimes seeking shelter in the close-branched cedars, but always coming out to enjoy the sunshine.

The male bird's golden crown is brightened by a band of glowing orange, but the female's is not. If he would but pause a few seconds, the black bands enclosing the crown would be seen, also a dark band on either wing between the pale gold bars. But there is no pause in the kinglet's flight even when he tries to sing, but he searches ceaselessly for insects, singing on small twigs like the chick-a-dees, clinging to the bark-like woodpeckers, and even fluttering in the air like the humming birds when sap is leaking from a broken twig. It is uncertain whether the sap or the attracted insects are sought.

So small a bird with olive feathers tinted with gold could be passed unnoticed did not his restlessness make itself known. His day is one continuous meal from morning till night and his services in clearing the trees of insects is great. There is a little cousin with whom he associates in spring and fall who has an even brighter crown though he often conceals this ruby color under his feathers. The ruby crowned kinglets do not remain with us, but spend a few days here in the spring and fall. The kinglets are among the few Canadian birds who have large families. Three, four and five are average Canadian bird families while eight, nine and ten are average old-world families.

We miss the kinglet when he flies away to his summer home in the north, even though hordes of other feathered songsters are daily arriving from the south.

THE BURDENS OF AGE

The kidneys seem to be about the first organs to wear out and fail to properly perform their work. The result is weak, lame, aching back, rheumatic pains and failing eyesight. Many people of advanced years have recovered health and comfort by using Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills. They ensure the healthful action of liver, kidneys and bowels.

HOW TO TAKE GOOD CARE OF YOUR HAIR.

Nothing spoils your good looks so much as homely hair—stringy, dull-colored, harsh. Nothing adds to good looks so much as beautiful hair—soft, silky, wavy and glossy. No matter how beautiful your hair is now, you can improve its good looks by using Harmony Hair Beautifier. If your hair is homely and ugly now, Harmony Hair Beautifier will make it softer, silkier, glossier, more beautiful in every way, and easier to put up and "stay put." Its rich rose-odour hides the unpleasant oily smell of the hair. It is rightly named; it beautifies the hair.

Very easy to apply—simply sprinkle a little on your hair each time before brushing it. It contains no oil, and will not change the color of the hair, nor darken gray hair. To keep hair and scalp dandruff-free and clean, use Harmony Shampoo. This pure liquid shampoo gives an instantaneous rich lather that immediately penetrates to every part of the hair and scalp, insuring a quick and thorough cleansing. Washed off just as quickly, the entire operation takes only a few moments. Contains nothing that can harm the hair; leaves no harshness or stickiness.

Both preparations come in odd-shaped, very ornamental bottles, with sprinkler tops. Harmony Hair Beautifier, $1.00. Harmony Shampoo, 50c. Both guaranteed to satisfy you in every way, or your money back. Sold only at the more than 7,000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only by us. T. E. & T. J. Brown, Druggists, Orangeville, Ont.

THE BANNER

THE BANNER, APRIL 23rd, 1914.

In the course of an address before the Ontario Good Roads Association, Mr. S. L. Squires, of Waterford, made the following pertinent observations :—"Roads are a necessity. Trails are but forerunners of settlement. Roads are the mark of civilization and the higher the civilization the higher the standard of roads. Ontario demands better roads to-day than it ever had before, not only because it has reached a higher point of civilization, but because the demand upon the roads is greater than ever before in its history. The prosperity of a country is largely measured by the ease of its transportation and the primary factor in transportation is the road which leads from the producer to the market towns. I believe that there is nothing that affects rural Ontario to the same extent as does its roads.

RURAL DEPOPULATION.

The depopulation of rural communities is a question which has caused much discussion on the platform and in the press very recently. Governments have been asked to do what they can in the interest of agriculture and in consequence experimental farms have been dotted here and there throughout the Dominion. But notwithstanding the call of the city and the fascination of well swept pavements and sky-scrapers is reaping its harvest from the countryside.

The farmer's son, with his sleeves rolled up, rests for a minute on his plough handles and while he rests gazes with longing eyes to high factory stacks belching forth dense clouds of smoke in some neighboring town. In his reverie he pictures to himself the business man with his starched collar and tan boots sitting behind his desk and saying to this man, come and he cometh, and to another, go and he does likewise. The young swain with brawny arms and well developed muscle does not think of the puny face which is the result of worry and strenuous business. Nor does it ever cross his mind how many of perhaps his own age and build are compelled to heave coal for barely a living wage under a task master ; whereas he, while he works hard, is his own master and when he wants to take an hour or so for pleasure, etc., he is at liberty to take it and nobody suffers.

Of course, life is life, and whether it is lived in the fashionable city mansion or the obscure hut on the prairie, it is much the same. We have been told and we believe that the secret of life or rather happiness, which is an adjunct to life, is contentment. Even the millionaire has his troubles as well as the laborer and the city man is not immune from the ups and downs of life anymore than the rural-ist. Poverty has its attendant difficulties and is terrible in all its forms, but from observation we are led to think that it is really more dreadful in our large cities than in rural districts.

While he may not think so, yet the farmer lives in a paradise to what he did, say 50 years ago. Up-to-date machinery, the telephone, rural mail delivery and the hydro radial are giving him comforts that his grandfather never dreamed of. All these things are adding much to make an exodus back to the land.

The rush from the land lies in the fact that man, being a gregarious animal and fond of company, likes the crowd of the city better than the solitude of the farm. Many leaving the country have given for a reason, that there was no company in the country. Modern inventions are overcoming these obstacles and we believe that the formation of farmers' clubs for moral, social and business uplift are important factors in keeping the boys on the farm and counteracting the fascination for the life in a crowded city.—Goderich Signal.

FOOLISH TO SUFFER FROM STOMACH ILLS.

What's the use of suffering from heartburn and the other disagreeable things caused by Dyspepsia and Indigestion, when we offer you the privilege of using Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets entirely at our risk, with the distinct understanding that, if they don't relieve your stomach trouble and make your stomach comfortable and your digestion easy, they will cost you nothing. If they don't do all you expect them to, we want you to tell us and let us give back your money. We know what they have done for others, and what they are made of. That is why we have confidence in them.

Among other things, they contain Pepsin and Bismuth, two of the greatest digestive aids known to medical science. They soothe and comfort the stomach, relieve heartburn and distress, promote the secretion of hastric juice and help make the bowels regular. We believe them to be by all odds the best remedy for indigestion or dyspepsia ever made. We believe you will say so, too, once you have used them. If you don't, they will cost you nothing. Sold only at the more than 7,000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only at our store. Three sizes, 25c, 50c and $1.00. T. F. & T. J. Brown, Druggists, Orangeville, Ont.

THE TOWN COUNCIL.

The Town Council ordered payment of the following accounts at its meeting on Monday night :—

George King, $2.20 ; Thos. Campbell, $1.02 ; John Matson, 51c ; J. F. Bennett, $1.50 ; W. O. Thomas, $1.67 ; J. W. Wild, $21.25 ; J. L. Island, $10.50 ; J. J. White, $5.20 ; E. H. Smith, $1.15 ; W. J. La Mc-Kay, $5.

Jos. Pattullo's account of $39.04 for local option costs and T. J. Robinson's account of $18.70 were referred.

The Clerk read a communication from John Best M.P. relative to the headquarters of the 36th Regiment. The Member stated that he was doing all he could to prevent the transfer of the Regiment to Toronto and expressed the opinion that Orangeville would be made the headquarters of the 36th either in its present or reorganized form.

The Clerk was instructed to forward a communication from T. J. Hannigan, Secretary of the Provincial Hydro-Radial Railway Union, to Mr. C. R. McKeown, M.P.P. and request him to ask for action in the matter.

Bowman & Connor, of Berlin, intimated that they were willing to purchase the elevated tank at the waterworks reservoir, stating that they could dispose of it to a small Ontario town. Council, however, was not willing to sell the tank at the present time.

W. W. Pope, Secretary of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission wrote the Council stating that its letter addressed to Hon. Adam Beck, had been turned over to the Engineering Department and would receive attention.

A letter was read from Mr. A. E. Saunders, Chief Officer of the License Department, explaining why fines had been imposed for second offences in the cases of certain persons convicted of illegally selling liquor.

Dr. Rooney addressed the Council relative to a park at the corner of John and York Sts, and the unsanitary condition of the old mill-race. A special Committee, composed of the Reeve, Deputy-Reeve and Couns. Henderson and McGuire, was appointed to report on the matters dealt with by Dr. Rooney and also on the condition of the creek running past the hospital.

The Streets and Town Property Committees presented a joint report, recommending that permission be granted to Gillespie Bros. to instal a gasoline tank underground as requested in their letter, the tank when completed to be partially under the sidewalk.

The Fire & Water Committee recommended payment of the Pine River Light & Power Co's account of $75.

Acting on the recommendation of the F. & W. Committee the Council decided to accept Frank Rohmer's offer to supply a horse for fire and practice purposes for one year from April 1st 1914 for $110.

The Finance Committee recommended the acceptance of the offers of V. A. Statia and John Foley for the municipal printing for 1914.

A by-law was put through to authorize the borrowing of money to meet current expenditure.

The matter of adopting a fixed policy re. the granting of bonuses was referred to the Industrial Committee for report.

The Streets Committee was instructed to have a tree cut down as requested by Mr. Wells.

Guelph to Owen Sound Survey

Yesterday at noon the surveyors of the hydro radial were seen in action in Owen Sound, beginning the survey for the Owen Sound-Chesley-Guelph line. This was rather earlier than it had been expected that they would get to work in Owen Sound and their survey which will be completed to-morrow to the town limits and somewhat beyond, was the result of another visit to Owen Sound of Locating Engineer, H. L. Buck. The latter was here last week and after having laid out the tentative route in from Bognor went on south toward Chesley and Hanover. He was highly impressed with the country through which he had gone and seeing in it the possibility of a potentially important feeder for the hydro radial decided that this survey, too, should be made. Consequently he came back to Owen Sound, with a view to clearing out of the way the only difficulty that presented itself, that of getting out of the town to the south. When this is completed there will remain nothing but to go on with the survey by way of Kilsyth to Chesley and then on to Hanover and Mount Forest and to Arthur, whence it is but a step to Guelph.—Owen Sound Times.

An Early Morning Blaze

About 2 o'clock on Sunday morning the clanging of the fire alarm disturbed the peaceful slumbers of the majority of our citizens. There were those who averred that they did not hear the bell at all, but they seem to have been greatly in the minority, judging from the large number of people who visited the scene of the blaze. The fire, which was located in the large frame stable connected with the old Royal hotel near the C.P.R. station, had spread from end to end of the building when the brigade arrived. The firemen directed their energies toward saving the open shed adjoining the doomed building and looking after the roofs of nearby dwellings. The stable made a hot fire while it lasted, but it died down rapidly and the danger to the other buildings was over in a short time. The building is owned by J. B. McNichol, whose loss is partially offset by insurance.

Cobourg citizens are agitating for a band, it being urged that the town must have one if it is to hold its place as a summer resort.

NERVOUS DISEASES IN THE SPRING

Cured by Toning the Blood and Strengthening the Nerves.

It is the opinion of the best medical authorities after long observation, that nervous diseases are more common and more serious in the spring than at any other time of the year. Vital changes in the system, after long winter months, may cause much more trouble than the familiar spring weakness and weariness from which most people suffer as the result of indoor life, in poorly ventilated and often overheated buildings. Official records prove that in April and May neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy and other forms of nerve troubles are at their worst, and that then, more than any other time, a blood making, nerve restoring tonic is needed.

The antiquated custom of taking purgatives in the spring is useless, for the system really needs strengthening, while purgatives only gallop through the bowels, leaving you weaker. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine, for they actually make the new, rich, red blood that feeds the starved nerves, and thus cure the many forms of nervous disorders. They cure also such other forms of spring troubles as headaches, poor appetite, weakness in the limbs, as well as remove unsightly pimples and eruptions. In fact they unfailingly bring new health and strength to weak, tired and depressed men, women and children.

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Lecture on Petroleum

Rev. A. E. de St. Dalmas delivered a very interesting lecture on "Petroleum and Its Products" in the Baptist Church on Tuesday evening. Owing to the rain, the attendance was not as large as the lecture deserved. The lecturer, who was at one time engaged in the work of the ministry in Petrolea which, as most of our readers know, is situated in the heart of the Ontario oil fields, showed an intimate knowledge of his subject. From the very commencement of his address, Mr. St. Dalmas held the close and undivided attention of his audience. He explained the method of boring, the care and storing of the oil and the different stages in the process of refining the crude product of the wells. The lecture was admirably illustrated by models of the machinery used, and specimens of crude petroleum and its products. Mr. St. Dalmas is evidently a close observer and his presentation of the salient facts connected with this great industry was decidedly instructive. Because of its educative character and the pleasing manner in which it was delivered, it can only be regarded as unfortunate that the lecture was not heard by a much larger audience. We understand, however, that Mr. St. Dalmas has engaged to give the lecture again at an early date, when it is to be hoped that the elements will be less unfavorable.

In the course of his lecture Mr. St. Dalmas made some statements which indicate the wonderful development that may be looked for in Canada's last great West in the not distant future. He quoted Dr. Egerton Young, for many years a missionary to the Indians, as stating that "about the headquarters of the Mackenzie river there are mammoth springs of petroleum." These are so vast that beside them, as the missionary put it, "the Pennsylvania fields would hardly make a respectable grease spot." Prof. Dawson was also quoted as stating with respect to the same district that "if the indications of oil are correct Canada has the largest oil bearing district in the world."

WHOOPING COUGH.

Mrs. Charles Lavell, Agassiz, B.C., writes : "Seven of our nine children had whooping cough the same winter and we attribute their cure to Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. We always have it in the house, and recommend it as the king of all medicine. I was formerly completely cured of protruding piles by using Dr. Chase's Ointment."

CITY PLANNING.

International Conference Will Be Held in Toronto in May.

During the last five years National Conferences on City Planning have been held annually in various cities of the United States, and have aroused such widespread interest that many American communities are now anxious to have the Conference held in their city and are willing to contribute the funds for that purpose. The city of Toronto, therefore, is to be congratulated on being the first place on this side of the International boundary to entertain the Conference, which this year will become international in scope and character. The financial difficulties have been overcome by a generous grant from the Dominion Government, which has appointed the Commission of Conservation to act as hosts. The Ontario government and the City of Toronto are also contributing. The question of city planning is thus recognized to be of national, provincial and municipal concern, and Field-Marshall H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, the Governor General, has graciously consented to open the Conference and to give an address.

The substantial assistance given by the Dominion government is evidence that the town-dweller, equally with the agriculturist, is receiving attention, and that not only the Federal capital, but all our Canadian cities are receiving from the Federal authorities such advice and assistance as the Congress will afford them. Invitations have been sent to all the cities and towns in the Dominion, requesting them to send delegations to the Conference and it is hoped that many will take advantage of the opportunity to come into touch with experts in civic problems from all over the continent. The aldermen will carry home ideas that, put into practice, will save their towns-people millions of dollars, besides acquiring a new sense of the responsibilities of their office and higher ideals of civic administration.

The scope of the Conference may be guaged by a glance at some of the topics which will form the main themes of discussion. Among these may be cited : The Relative Importance of City Planning as Compared with all other Functions of City Government, by Andrew Wright Crawford, editor of the city-planning section of the "Public Ledger"; Provision for Future Rapid Transit, by J. V. Davies, consulting engineer for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company ; Rapid Transit and the Auto Bus, by John A. McCollum, assistant engineer, Board of Estimate and Apportionment, New York City ; Protecting Residential Districts, by Lawrence Veiller, secretary and director of the National Housing Association, New York City ; Toronto's Water Front Development, by R. S. Gourlay, of the Toronto Harbour Board ; A Consideration of the Principles and Procedure of a Canadian Town Planning Act, a draft of which is now being prepared by a special committee appointed by the Commission of Conservation ; and Recreation Facilities in the City Plan, by Henry V. Hubbard, professor of landscape architecture in Harvard University.

Additional interesting features will be a tour of the city and harbour of Toronto, luncheon topics, and an open session for the discussion of subjects to be submitted by members of the Conference.

A historic residence was burned in Oshawa when the Murton house was destroyed. The house, which formerly belonged to the Arkland estate, was used as a barracks by soldiers in 1837. A severe loss in the fire was the library of the late Police Magistrate Murton, which contained many valuable and rare volumes.

ALTON.

The regular monthly meeting of the Alton Women's Institute was held at the home of Mr. Thos. W. Meek on Thursday, April 16th. After the usual business had been transacted, Mrs. Jas. Culligan gave an excellent Paper on "The Value of Punctuality," which was particularly interesting and instructive. Miss Harrison, of Caledon, demonstrated the uses of the Duplex Vacuum Cleaner, which though not electric proved easy to operate. The meeting was closed with the singing of The Maple Leaf, after which a dainty luncheon was served by the hostess.

The May meeting, which will be the Annual Meeting and Election of Officers, will be held at the home of Mrs. Wm. Hawkins on May 14th at 2.30 p.m., instead of May 21st, as it would be according to the schedule.

Jeffers, the druggist, has the sole agency for Spalding's sporting goods. Ask about them.

CALEDON.

Seeding is here and some of our farmers have commenced seeding.

Miss Ellen Quinn, sister of Reeve Quinn, who underwent a rather critical operation in St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto, some time ago, returned home on Saturday last. We hope for a speedy convalescence.

Miss Jennie Morrison, of Lucknow, visited her sister, Mrs. Geo. Hillyard, during the Easter vacation.

Last week was moving week in our town. Mr. W. J. Patterson moved to Mr. Jas. Warnock's house adjoining his own farm, 2nd line, east, Mrs. David Taylor now occupies part of the Patterson house, while Mr. Wm. McCort moved to the Taylor property and the Caledon Library Board have rented the McCort property for a library.

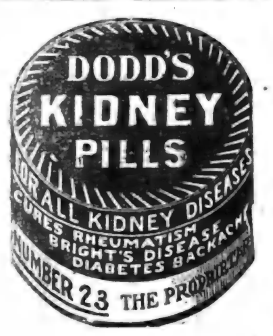
The Caledon Dramatic Club finished the season by presenting their play to a large and appreciative audience in Inglewood on Friday night. Our young people have had a very successful season, having given their play five times since New Year's Eve, and were highly appreciated on each and every occasion and are already planning for a new play for next season. The members of the Club speak very highly of the kind hospitality shown them during their visit to Inglewood, they having been invited to the house of Mr. Chas. Scott, where a sumptuous repast was served. We wish them success next year.

Miss Hattie Clarke has returned to the Queen City after spending a couple of weeks under the parental roof.

Miss Maude Scarland, who has been home during the Easter vacation, returned to Toronto to renew her studies at the Normal School.

Miss Lila McCartney has returned to Melbourne to continue her duties as teacher there, taking with her Mrs. Griffith, her grandmother, who will spend all summer with her daughter there.

Miss Pearl McLaughlin has returned to Toronto fully recovered from her recent illness.



Miss Ruby J. Laughlin spent Easter vacation with friends in Toronto.

Mr. Clarence Perdue, of Toronto, spent the week end with Caledon friends.

The Caledon Branch of the Peel County Women's Institute will hold its annual meeting in the Town Hall, Charleston, on Wednesday, May 6th. The election of new officers and appointing of delegates to attend the annual County Convention will be decided upon. There will also be a roll call for Household Hints. A good attendance is expected.

MONO MILLS.

In justice to the interested parties and particularly to Mr. Darraugh, certain explanations are perhaps due regarding our Mono Mills correspondence of two weeks ago and the letter from "The Bunch" in last week's Banner. In the first place neither Mr. Darraugh nor our regular Mono Mills correspondent had anything whatever to do with the correspondence of two weeks ago. It came from an altogether different source. It follows then that Mr. Darraugh is innocent of the charge of breaking faith with the boys, after he had agreed that he would not say anything about the matter. The statements in last week's letter that Mrs. Darraugh "had slushed through the bush herself to gather the sap" and that Mr. Darraugh "must have been hard pushed for ready cash" are regrettable, because calculated to create a wrong impression among people outside of the immediate neighborhood. For that reason, if no other, their publication is a matter of regret and the author would have shown better judgment had he omitted these reflections from his communication. Mr. Darraugh, we understand, attended to the sap gathering himself, except one day when business called him away to Orangeville. In his absence Mrs. Darraugh collected the sap from some of the pails to prevent it going to waste. Mr. Darraugh's standing as a well-to-do farmer is well known in the neighborhood and those acquainted with his circumstances will appreciate how little warrant there is for the statement that he must have been hard pushed for cash. With regard to the amount which the boys paid to settle the matter, the sum fixed appears to have been very moderate indeed, in view of the amount of sap that was either boiled down or wasted, the wood used and the damage done to the utensils. With these explanations, which are made for the information of the general public, which knows little or nothing about Mr. Darraugh or the other interested parties, the incident ends so far as the columns of this journal are concerned.—Ed.

LUCILLE.

Seeding has commenced in the neighborhood and of course everything else must give place for a time.

We are sorry to learn that Miss Lucy Atkinson is still very poorly, but hope for an improvement in the near future.

Mr. R. Maples is erecting a new stable this spring with the genial Jack Hassard as contractor.

There is quite a thrill of elation and excitement in this neighborhood over the announcement that the Duke of Connaught purposes making a stopover here during his tour of Western Ontario to decorate Chief Dermott of our Fire Brigade, who created a world's record for all time by arriving on the scene of the holocaust several minutes before the fire started at all. The community is justly proud of you, Jack. It is also rumored that the man who claims he would have led Jack by at least two jumps, only that, as he was about gaining his second wind, he recollected how close it was to April 1st, and returned to bed, will be presented with a beautiful bouquet by the Princess Pat, who accompanies the Duke.

The sap suckers also made good time considering the fact that they appear to have brought about two and a half barrels of sap with them in their boots and left themselves a scant half barrel to convert into taffy. The pity of it is that they were soaked for a full three barrels and received no recompense from the man, whose property they had damaged.

Oxford County Council put a limit of $15 each on the expenses of its delegates to the Hydro-Radial deputation to Ottawa.

MONO MILLS.

Some people have started seeding around here.

While sawing wood with a sawing machine at Mr. John Lyness' one day last week, John McElwain had the misfortune to have one of his thumbs smashed while holding a stake, which one of his neighbors was driving with an iron sledge.

We are glad to see Ernest McDonald able to be out again after three weeks' illness.

Miss Annie Holmes spent Sunday with Misses Ina and Ella Taylor here.

Mr. Ira Stork, our general merchant, has been ill for some time.

Mr. Ed. Patterson and Dr. Dunning spent a couple of days with friends in the city last week.

Mr. Geo. Jackson had his new auto out for the first time one day last week.

Some of the boys around here think that boiling down sap is too hard work, when they have to pay for it.

Miss Ellie Rolley, of Palgrave, is spending a month at Mr. Geo. Woods.

PRETTY SAFE PRISON.

Bloodhounds Guarded One Exit, Man Eating Sharks the Other.

Shark skin, shark teeth, shark oil, shark meat and several other byproducts of the dead shark are articles of greater or lesser utility, but I have never heard of but one instance where the living shark was put to a practical use. This, says Lewis R. Freeman, was when they used him as a prison guard in the old days when British convicts were transported to Australia, the monsters serving this purpose for many years at the Port Arthur settlement, ten miles south of Hobart, the present capital of Tasmania. The prisons at this point, some of which may still be seen, were situated upon a peninsula whose only connection with the mainland was by a long, narrow strip of sand called, from its configuration, the Eaglehawk's Neck.

The convicts were allowed considerable liberty on the peninsula, but to prevent their escape to the mainland half starved bloodhounds were chained all the way across the narrowest portion of the neck. Several prisoners having avoided the "bloodhound zone" by swimming, the authorities adopted the effective but grewsome expedient of feeding the sharks at that point several times a day. In a few weeks the place became literally alive with the voracious man eaters, and from that time on the only convict who ever escaped accomplished his purpose by rolling himself up in kelp and working along, inch by inch, timing his movements to correspond with those of the other beaps of seaweed that were being rolled by the surf.—Wide World Magazine.

CHEAPER FENCEPOSTS

Preservatives Prolong Life of Poorest Woods.

As a result of the many enquiries in regard to the preservative treatment of fenceposts, the forestry branch, Ottawa, has now issued a circular on this subject. The various methods described of treating the posts with the preservatives are all illustrated by diagrams, and the apparatus required is simple and costs little.

The great advantage of these treatments is that they keep even cheap woods free from decay for from 10 to 15 years. Many kinds of wood found in farmers' wood lots will last, when used as posts, only four years or thereabouts; after treatment, such as described, they last twice or three times, even four times, as long.

Creosote, which costs in Canada, from 10 to 25 cents a gallon, is the best preservative. When boiling hot creosote is applied liberally with a brush, for instance—to the butts of well-seasoned posts from which the bark has been removed, it sinks into the wood for a distance of about a quarter of an inch. This should add at least ten years to the life of a post made from a non-durable wood, such as poplar, balsam, fir or spruce. This is not the best method, but it is the simplest and, on a small scale, probably the cheapest. Other methods require that the posts be kept covered in tanks of hot creosote for a longer or shorter period.

Besides lengthening the life of the post, the preservative treatment also tends to reduce the cost of the posts in another way, for as cheap local woods can be used, the first cost and the cost of transportation are usually much lower than for cedar, oak or tamarack. Moreover, as posts will need to be set less often, the proportionate cost of setting the post will be less. Taking into account all the items that go to make up the cost of the post, and comparing this with the number of years it will be found, in the majority of cases, to be much less for treated posts.

Recognition Comes Slowly.

"The late Alfred Russel Wallace, the codiscoverer with Darwin of evolution, had a hard row to hoe at first," said a physiologist.

"Poor Dr. Wallace had in fact such a very hard row to hoe that he couldn't afford to marry till he was sixty-three, when to balance matters he married a young girl of eighteen by whom he had a son and a daughter.

"I commiserated in London last summer with Dr. Wallace.

"'It was too bad,' I once said to him. 'A man of genius like you, cramped with poverty till past middle life! It was too bad.'

"'My friend,' Dr. Wallace replied, 'always you will find the fire of genius takes a long, long time to make the pot boil.'"—Detroit Free Press.

HAD A NOSE FOR NEWS.

He Got a "Scoop" by Knowing a Cabinet Minister's Weakness.

How a cabinet secret was revealed in a most amazing fashion by a needy and adventurous penny a liner at the end of his resources is related by Mr. J. D. Symon in "The Press and Its Story." It was during the administration of the Duke of Wellington, at a juncture when the opposition would have given anything for some hint of the cabinet's policy. The secret was well guarded until one evening, just at the rising of the house, a penny a liner, who had been hanging about Westminster waiting for something to turn up, saw the duke emerge from the house of lords accompanied by one of his colleagues.

Now, the duke in his later years was very hard of hearing and cherished that not uncommon illusion of the deaf, that in order to make other people hear he, too, must shout. It occurred to the scribe that if he would only follow the prime minister he might hear something to his advantage.

The night was dark, so the penny a liner managed to keep well within earshot and yet to escape remark by those he was following. He had not gone very far before he knew he was in luck's way. The duke was actually talking about the situation in his usual loud tones and gradually proceeded to unfold the policy of the cabinet. The penny a liner listened with all his ears and kept well within range of the minister all the way to Apsley house. Thereupon, with beating heart, he sought some friendly refuge and committed his discovery to writing. This done, he lost no time in calling upon the editor of one of the leading opposition papers.

The editor glanced over the article and was thunderstruck when he realized its nature. Here was the very thing for which the party had been praying. Naturally the editor inquired how so uninfluential a person could have come by such very private information. Being satisfied, however, of the truth of the man's story, he decided to print it and gave the reporter a handsome check for his enterprise. Next day the appearance of the news, re-enforced by a leading article, spread consternation in the government camp. Who was the traitor?

Somewhat of a hue and cry was raised, and the duke's friend fell under suspicion. Relations between the prime minister and his colleague were in fact somewhat strained, until at last the true story of the remarkable discovery was given to the world.

Ingenuous.

Little Caillou, a French boy, was allowed to take luncheon with his mother and her guests on condition that he ate only that which was offered him, making no comment. By and by, however, when dessert was on the table, Caillou could not resist a certain temptation.

"Please, mamma, may I have a sardine?"

"No, my son; you know very well that you may not have a sardine, that such things are not allowed you. And I thought you promised me not to ask for anything special to eat."

"Oh, I don't want to eat it," was the little boy's ingenuous and astonishing answer. "I just want to put it in my glass of water and see it float."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Rest Was Easy.

Mrs. Gordon had recently moved into the neighborhood.

"I thought I would come and tell you that your James has been fighting with my Edward," said one of the neighbors one morning as she called at Mrs. Gordon's door, "and settle the matter if I could."

"Well, for my part," responded Mrs. Gordon haughtily, "I have no time to enter into any discussion about the children's quarrels. I consider myself above such trifling things."

"I'm delighted to hear it," was the reply. "I'll send James over on a stretcher in an hour or two."—Life.

Pretty Dead.

A native of a boom town who had moved away happened on one of his old neighbors who still lived there and asked him about the town.

"Oh, it's awful," replied the unfortunate neighbor. "Deadest place you ever saw. Say, you know Jones, don't you? Well, he dropped dead in front of the postoffice Sunday, and they didn't find the body till Thursday."—Everybody's.

Easy For Him.

"How much alimony did his wife demand?"

"Twenty dollars a week more than his salary."

"How foolish!"

"Well, she said she guessed he could afford it since he always had spent twice what he earned."—Judge.

No Degrees.

A flippant young woman remarks that her father can turn out bachelors a great deal quicker than any college. He doesn't do it by degrees, she says. He begins the graduation exercises promptly at 11 p. m., and they are always finished two minutes later.—Boston Transcript.

CAPITALIZATION OF RAILWAYS

It is proposed at the present session of Parliament to amend the Railway Act to provide that all issues of securities of railways must be submitted to and approved by the Railway Commission. An obvious purpose is to control the financing of railways, and keep it within the bounds of honesty. Another object, which it is contended should be kept in view, is to control the issue of securities so as not to embarras the public control of freight rates. The question has arisen upon what valuation freight rates are to be calculated, whether upon the present actual value of the property or upon the value of its stock and securities. If rates are to be based on securities, it becomes important to say whether stocks or bonds may be issued and, if bonds are issued, what are the expenditures which they may include. It is conceivable that a railway might issue bonds to pay operating expense or improvements lasting less than the life of the bonds, and so for the benefit of the stockholders a permanent bond charge might be accumulated, rendering difficult the reduction of rates. The life of bonds, too, would be regulated so as to guard against the permanence of high interest, and to force the payment of upkeep and renewal out of current earnings. It is said that bonds for a hundred years or more have been issued in the United States. It is thought by some that the general principles of regulation ought to be included in the proposed amendment. —The Weekly Sun.

KEEPING DOWN FOREST FIRES

Fire protection is now-a-days regarded as one of the necessary expenses in a town of any size and standing, and forms a considerable item in the annual expenditure—to say nothing of the large sums spent every year by private citizens in the way of premiums to fire insurance companies. Protection of forests from fire is gradually coming to be recognized as an expenditure just as profitable on the part of the Provincial and Federal Governments, which control a very great proportion of our forests. The vast losses which have occurred through forest fires are hinted at when it is said that in the valley of the Ottawa river, one of Canada's greatest lumbering districts, ten dollars' worth of timber has been destroyed by fire for every dollar's worth taken out by the lumbermen.

The Miramichi, N.B., fire of October, 1825, with its loss of 160 lives and 250,000 pounds sterling, in property, has become historical in Canada, as in the U. S. have the Peshtigo (Wis.) fire of 1871, and the Hinckley (Wis.) fire of 1894, the two together being responsible for the loss of over 1,000 lives and millions of dollars' worth of property. Such fires, fortunately, are very rare. More frequently by far the traveller in the wooded districts comes across tracts of miles in extent where a fire has raged with the result that only a blackened waste is left, with charred tree-trunks on every hand as a testimony of what the forest has once been there.

But the majority of fires do not get up into the trunks of the trees at all. These "ground" and "surface" fires, as they are known, burn in the soil of the forest, or run over the surface and lick up the fallen leaves and other debris on the ground. In this process the roots and bases of the trees are often wounded, and through the wounds made fungi gain entrance and attack the trees. In parts of the Riding Mountain forest reserve in Manitoba it has been found that seventy-five per cent. or more of the poplar trees, which form the greatest part of the stand of timber there, are affected by rot which has gained entrance to the tree through this cause.

Forest fires have small beginnings, and often a few minutes' work when a small fire is discovered will save many hours' work and the loss of many thousands of dollars' worth of timber subsequently. It is in this fact—the possibility of discovering fires when they are small and then putting them out—that there lies the value of the systems of patrol which have been initiated by the Dominion, Ontario, Quebec and some of the other provinces for the protection of forests.

GAINED 30 POUNDS

Was thin, pale and weak. Had frequent headaches and stomach troubles. Cured by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mrs. H. Laich, Cannington Manor, Sask., writes—"You will remember me writing you last spring. Well, I gave up my doctor and began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. This treatment cured me rapidly and I was soon myself again. I was pale, thin and weak, suffered from stomach troubles and liver complaint and frequently had sick, nervous headaches.

I was surprised to find that in a few weeks time I had gained 30 pounds in weight. I never felt so strong and well in all my life. Headaches never bother me any more and I am grateful for the cure. If people would only give this medicine a fair trial they would certainly be cured."

You can feel yourself gaining in strength and vitality while using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. You sleep better, eat your meals with more relish, and digest them without discomfort. But it is also interesting to note your increase in weight for this is proof positive that your system is obtaining additional nourishment from this food cure and that new, firm flesh and tissue is being added to the body. POPULATION BY MUNICIPALITIES.

The Barrie Gazette prints the following table of the populations of the municipalities of the county of Simcoe. The total population of the county increased 447. The increase was in the towns. Most of the rural municipalities show a decrease. Midland had the largest increase, 1,322, but this is chiefly due to the annexing of Dollartown, and there is a corresponding drop of 791 in Tay. Alliston's population shows an advance of 139. Orillia increased 432. Penetanguishene went up 556, and Barrie by 95. Collingwood on the other hand, dropped 861. Bradford and Stayner went back to the village stage. Tottenham remained stationary. Creemore and Coldwater are also on the down grade. Beeton had 70 more in 1913 than 1912. Among the townships, Tossorontio, Orillia, Tiny, Medonte and Flos, all show increases. Essa went back 98, Innisfil by 176, Oro 64, Adjala 329, Tecumseth 164, while Tay fell to the extent of 791.

GRAND VALLEY LOSS.

Methodism in Grand Valley looses valued and well-trusted members in the removal of Mr., and Mrs. John Sanderson to Toronto, after spending about forty years in this part, first in Amaranth adjoining the village and lately as residents of Grand Valley. During all these years Mr. Sanderson has been actively associated with the church as Sabbath School scholar, teacher and superintendent; and as a member of the Quarterly Official Board. Mrs. Sanderson also, was active in the women's work of the church. On Monday evening after League, Rev. C. L. Poole presided at a gathering of about 75 members, and read an address appreciative of the diligent consistent services rendered by Mr. and Mrs. Sanderson, and wishing them continued work in the Master's service in their new home. Robert Miller presented Mr. Sanderson with a gold-headed umbrella, and John Brown presented him with a pair of gold cuff-links; while Mrs. Wm. McKinley and Mrs. S. Tate presented Mrs. Sanderson with an umbrella and a brooch. After Mr. Sanderson replied, short speeches were heard from Police Magistrate Hamilton, replied, short speeches were heard Councillor Brown, and Chief of Police Graham, and Wm. West, when the ladies served refreshments.—Star & Vidette.

HIS TWIN BROTHER TOLD HIM THE CURE.

Why J. C. Mapp Praises Dodd's Kidney Pills.

He Suffered from Kidney Disease, Lumbago and Rheumatism for Five Years — Now He is a Well Man Again.

Boileau P. O., Ponsonby, Que., Apr. 20th. (Special.)—J. C. Mapp, a well-known farmer living near here, who suffered from Kidney Disease for five years, is once more a well man, and in a statement given to the press he gives all the credit for his cure to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"My trouble started with a cold about five years ago," Mr. Mapp states, "and developed into lumbago and rheumatism. I had a bitter taste in my mouth in the mornings and I was terribly nervous. I was depressed and low spirited and found it difficult to collect my thoughts, while at times I was troubled with stiffness in the joints. My appetite was fitful, and I had heart flutterings that added to my fears. My twin brother, who had used Dodd's Kidney Pills and got great benefit from them, advised me to use them. The first two boxes did me so much good that I got two more, and they completed my cure. Dodd's Kidney Pills are the right remedy for Kidney trouble."

Every person who has two or more of Mr. Mapp's symptoms has sick Kidneys. The right remedy for sick Kidneys is Dodd's Kidney Pills. If you don't know it out of your own experience, ask your neighbors.

FROZEN BUBBLES.

It was one of the coldest days of winter. Benny came home from school intending to brave the cold and go coasting till dark but when he found mamma had a sick headache, he said nothing about coasting, but volunteered to amuse four-year-old Lulu while mamma lay down for a nap. That's the kind of a boy Benny was!

"Let's blow soap bubbles," he said, taking Lulu into the kitchen, where he made a cup of beautiful soapsuds. Each had a pipe, and they blew bubbles for a long time. The sun shone in at the window, making them all the colors of the rainbow.

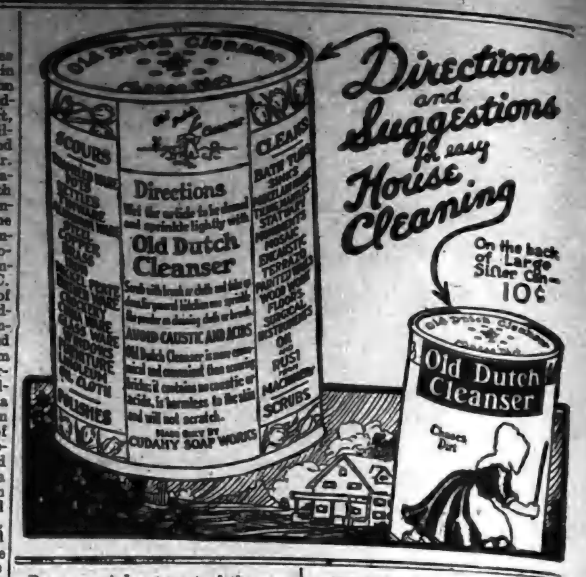
"O, I wish I could keep 'em!" sighed Lulu; "they are so pretty!"

An idea came into Benny's wise young head. He took a piece of an old soft woollen blanket, and carrying it out into the shed, spread it very smoothly on the floor in an out-of-the way corner. Then going back into the kitchen, he said: "Now, Lulu, I'm going out into the shed to work a few minutes. It's too cold for you out there, but, if my plans work well, I'll wrap you up warm, and take you out to see what I have done. You keep on blowing bubbles here."

"All right," said Lulu, cheerfully.

Benny carried out part of the soapsuds, and as rapidly as possible blew about a dozen bubbles, floating them on on to the soft blanket. The cold was so intense that they froze instantly before they could burst; and there they stood looking like so many delicate glass balls.

When the blanket was well filled, Benny went in, and, putting on Lulu's warm wraps, took her out to see the bubbles. How surprised she was!



"Can't I roll them around?" she asked.

"No, indeed!" said Benny, "The least touch would break them all to smash!"

When mamma got up with her headache relieved, she had to go out and see the bubbles, and so did papa when he came home.

The night was so cold, and the shed door and windows being closed, so that there was no draught of air, the bubbles were as good as ever in the morning. But before noon, they began to crack open and dry away; and when Benny came home at night, the weather was milder, and each bright bubble had vanished, leaving only a bit of soapsuds in its place.

This is a true story, and some sharp day this winter you bright boys and girls can try the experiment for yourselves.—Youth's Companion.

Have Pretty Hair

Thick, Soft, Fluffy, and no Dandruff—Use Parisian Sage.

If your hair is losing its natural color, coming out and splitting, or lacks that enviable softness, gloss and beauty, do not despair—pretty hair is largely a matter of care. If it is too thin make it grow. If it is harsh and brittle soften it up—lubricate it. If you have dandruff it is because the scalp is too dry and flakes off. Freshen up the scalp with Parisian Sage — all dandruff disappears, falling hair and itching head cease, your hair is doubly beautiful.

Parisian Sage, sold by F. S. Pickering and at all drug counters, is just what you need—a large bottle costs but 50 cents. It surely makes the hair lustrous and seem twice as abundant. You cannot be disappointed in Parisian Sage.

GAMES OF ARAB CHILDREN.

All children like to ride, and in the East the dark-eyed boys and girls enjoy nothing better than the donkeys.

We saw some that were large, handsome and went with the speck of horses. But these cost so much that the American boys who go to Tripoli mount the little ones. They come cheaper. At that port there was a big stable full of donkeys "all bridled, saddled and ready to go," and these creatures had been trained to start straight home the minute the rider got down from his saddle, no matter where this happened to be. But the boys did not seem to mind, not even when the Arab lads would laugh and jeer at them for "getting left" in this way.

The little girls in the East do not enjoy life as much as the boys. The fact is, they are never made welcome in the Arab homes, and the whole house mourns forty days over the birth of a girl. One notices very quickly that it is the boys who have the best time in Syria. They are not as kind to their sisters as they ought to be; not as helpful or as gentle as they might be. And when games are played the poor little girls and next to no fun. We watched them playing "Bling Man's Buff," "Puss in the Corner" and "Button, Button, who has the Button?"

But the gayest game of all—and the one the Arab children know a number—is one they call jereed.

This last might be thought of as the game of that country. It is played with spears and a large number, say forty, may take part. But children are likely to get hurt, for it is a warlike game, even worse than our football or baseball for accidents.—The Child's Gem.

THE CITY OF UNFINISHED LIVES.

Louis Watson.

"This man began to build and was not able to finish."—Luke 14:30.

The other night there stood by my bedside a stranger. He took me by the hand and led me away as though into another world. I found myself in a city by far the largest I was ever in. At first everything was shrouded in a light so dim that only the vaguest outlines could be seen; and the buildings seemed to possess an impressive magnificence, a surpassing beauty, a wonderful design.

But while I was thus pondering over the beauties of this strange city, the light which had been so dim suddenly flooded in with a new brightness. In this new light everything could be distinctly seen. I was conscious of a shock of disappointment. Something was strangely wrong. Did I gaze upon a city that had been ruined by some great upheaval of nature? Everywhere I turned my eyes there was a sense of incompleteness, as of work begun but never finished.

"This, said the strange figure at my side, "is the City of Unfinished Lives. They dwell here who began to build and did not finish."

I looked again. Before me was one of the finest edifices in sight. Deep in the heart of a beautiful lawn it stood with terraces and slopes falling away from all sides. But what a disappointment it was. Nothing had been finished. The marble pillars stood uncapped; the huge dome was uninclosed; the scaffolding, which had never been removed, was decaying where it stood; and building material, now overgrown with grass, was scattered over the lawn. It was like some wondrous piece of music whose sweetest notes were left unconposed.

"What does it all mean?" I inquired, turning to my guide.

"This," he replied, "is the Mansion of an Unfinished Life. It might have been one of the most beautiful of another city; but," he added sadly, "it was never finished."

Rapidly, then he led me from street to street, and from avenue to avenue, and everywhere it was the same. Nothing had been finished. It was all an unfulfilled prophecy; possibilities that had never been realized. It might have been heaven; but it was hell. I could stand it no longer, and I wrenched loose from my guide and fled. And with the effort I became conscious that I was yet in the world where men build the house of their character.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER VII.—continued.

"If it is not selfishness it is just sheer heartlessness with you, Annabel," Miss Pellissier declared. "I wish that Anna had left an address. I must confess that I am uneasy about her. She was always your father's favorite. After all, of you two girls——"

She stopped short, looking at Annabel with a sudden keenness.

"Well, aunt?"

Miss Pellissier did not finish her sentence then, or at any other time. Nevertheless, from that moment she was plagued with a constantly recurring suspicion which she was never able altogether to quiet. It was not a suspicion which she would have cared to share with Sir John Ferringhall, and it was connected with that curious change of names between the two girls which she had accepted but never understood.

• • • • • •

Anna sat back in her cab, but found it remain stationary.

"Gracious!" she exclaimed to herself. "I don't know where to go to."

The catman, knocking with the butt end of his whip upon the window, reminded her that he was in a similar predicament.

"Drive towards St. Pancras," she directed promptly. "I will tell you when to stop."

The cab rumbled off. Anna leaned forward, watching the people in the streets. It was then for the first time she remembered that she said nothing to her sister of the man in the hospital.

CHAPTER VIII.

"White's"

Northwards, away from the inhospitality of West Kensington, rumbled the ancient four-wheel cab, laden with luggage and drawn by a wheezy old horse rapidly approaching its last days. Inside was Anna, leaning a little forward to watch the passers-by, bright-eyed, full to the brim of the insatiable curiosity of youth—the desire to understand and appreciate this new world in which she found herself. She was practically an outcast, she had not even the ghost of a plan as to her future, and she had something less than five pounds in her pocket. She watched the people and hummed softly to herself.

"Please stop, cabman," she ordered.

The man pulled up. It was not a difficult affair.

"Is this Montague Street, W.C.?" she asked.

The man looked as though he would have liked to deny it, but could not.

"Stay where you are for a moment," she directed. "I want to find an address."

The man contented himself with a nod. Anna rummaged about in her dressing-case, and finally drew out a letter. On the envelope was written —— Sydney Courtlaw, Esq.,

13 Montague St.

"Number 13, please, cabman."

"We've come past it, miss," the man answered, with a note of finality in his gruff voice.

"Then turn and go back there," she directed.

The man muttered something inaudible, and gathered up the reins. His horse, which had apparently gone to sleep, preferred to remain where he was. After a certain amount of manoeuvring, however, he was induced to crawl around, and in a few minutes came to a stop again before a tall brightly-painted house, which seemed like an oasis of colour and assertive prosperity in a long dingy row. This was number 13, Montague Street, familiarly spoken of in the neighborhood as "White's."

Anna promptly alighted with the letter in her hand. The door was opened for her by a weary-looking youth in a striped jacket several sizes too large for him. The rest of his attire was nondescript.

"Does Mr. Courtlaw, Mr. Sydney Courtlaw, live here, please?" Anna asked him.

Anna hesitated, and then held out the letter.

"I think that I will leave this letter for him," she said. "It is from his brother in Paris. Say that I will call again or let him know my address in London."

The young man accepted the letter and the message, and seemed about to close the door when a lady issued from one of the front rooms and intervened. She wore a black satin dress, a little shiny at the seams, a purposeless tow of white tulle at the back of her neck, and a huge chatelaine. She addressed Anna with a beaming smile and a very creditable mixture of condescension and officiousness. Under the somewhat trying incandescent light her cheeks to a recent use of the powder puff.

"I think you were inquiring for Mr. Courtlaw," she remarked. "He is one of our guests—perhaps I should say boarders here, but he seldom returns before dinner time. We dine at seven-thirty. Can I give him any message for you?"

"Thank you," Anna answered. "I have a letter for him from his brother, which I was just leaving."

"I will see that he gets it immediately on his return," the lady promised. "You did not wish to see him particularly this evening, then?"

Anna hesitated.

"Well, no," she answered. "To tell you the truth though, I am quite a stranger in London, and it occurred to me that Mr. Courtlaw might have been able to give me an idea where to stop."

"Were you thinking of private apartments, a boarding-house or an hotel?" she asked.

"I really had not thought about it at all," Anna answered smiling. "I expected to stay with a relation, but I found that their arrangements did not allow of it. I have been used to living in apartments in Paris, but I suppose the system is different here."

The lady in black satin appeared undecided. She looked at Anna, who was far too nice-looking to be travelling about alone, to that reassuring pile of luggage, and wrinkled her brows thoughtfully.

"Of course," she said diffidently, "this is a boarding house, although we never take in promiscuous travellers. The class of guests we have are all permanent, and I am obliged to be very careful indeed. But—if you are a friend of Mr. Courtlaw's—I should like to oblige Mr. Courtlaw."

"It is very nice of you to think of it," Anna said briskly. "I should really like to find somewhere to stay if it is only for a few nights."

The lady stood away from the door.

"Will you come this way," she said, "into the drawing room? There is no one in there just now. Most of my people are upstairs dressing for dinner. The gentleman are so particular now, and a good thing too, I say. I was always used to it, and I think it gives quite a tone to an establishment. Please sit down, Miss—dear me, I haven't asked you your name yet."

"My name is Pellissier," Anna said. "Anna Pellissier."

"I am Mrs. White," the lady in black satin remarked. "It makes one feel quite awkward to mention such a thing, but after all I think that it is best for both parties. Could you give me any references?"

"There is Mr. Courtlaw," Anna said, "and my solicitors, Messrs. Le Mercier and Stowe, of St. Heliers. They are rather a long way off, but you could write to them. I am sorry that I do not know any one in London. But after all, Mrs. White, I am not at all sure that I could afford to come to you. I am shockingly poor. Please tell me what your terms are."

"Well," Mrs. White said slowly, "it depends a good deal upon what rooms you have. Just now my best ones are all taken."

"So much the better," Anna declared cheerfully. "The smallest will do for me quite well."

Mrs. White looked mysteriously about the room as though to be sure that no one was listening.

"I should like you to come here," she said. "It's a great deal for a young lady who's alone in the world, as I suppose you are at present, to have a respectable home, and I do not think is such case that private apartments are at all desirable. We have a very nice set of young people here too just at present, and you would soon make friends. I will take you for thirty-five shillings a week. Please don't let any one know that."

"I have no idea what it costs to live in London," Anna said, "but I should like very much to come for a short time if I might."

"Certainly," Mrs. White said. "Two days' notice shall be sufficient on either side."

"And I may bring my luggage in and send that cabman away?" Anna asked. "Dear me, what a relief! If I had had any nerves that man would have trampled on them long ago."

"Cabmen are so trying," Mrs. White assented. "You need have no further trouble. The manservant shall bring your trunks in and pay the fare too, if you like."

Anna drew out her purse.

"You are really a good Samaritan," she declared. "I am perfectly certain that that man meant to be rude to me. He has been bottling it up all the way from West Kensington."

Mrs. White rang a bell.

"Come upstairs," she said, "and I will show you your room. And would you mind hurrying a little. You won't want to be late the first evening, and it's ten minutes past seven now. Gracious, there's the gong. This way, my dear—and—you will excuse my mentioning it, but a quiet blouse and a little chiffon, you know, will be quite sufficient. It's your first evening and early impressions do count for so much. You understand me, I'm sure."

Anna was a little puzzled, but she only laughed.

"Perhaps, as I've only just arrived," she remarked, "I might be forgiven if I do not change my skirt. I packed so hurriedly that it will take me a long time to find my things."

"Certainly," Mrs. White assured her. "Certainly. I'll mention it. You're tired, of course. This is your room. The gong will go at seven-thirty. Don't be late if you can help it."

• • • • • •

Anna was not late, but her heart sank within her when she entered the drawing room. It was not a hopeful looking group. Two or three podgy looking old men with wives to match, half-a-dozen over-dressed girls, and a couple of underdressed American ones, who still wore the clothes in which they had been tramping half over London since breakfast time. A sprinkling of callow youths, and a couple of pronounced young Jews, who were talking loudly together in some unintelligible jargon of the City. What had she to do with such of these? She had hard work to keep a smiling face, as Mrs. White, who had risen to greet her, proceeded with a formal, and from Anna's point of view, a wholly unnecessary round of introductions. And then suddenly—a relief. A young man—almost a boy, slight, dark, and with his brother's deep grey eyes—came across the room to her.

"You must be the Miss Pellissier of whom David has told me so much," he said, shyly. "I am very glad you have come here. I heard from David about you only this morning."

"You are marvellously like your brother," Anna said, beaming upon him. "I have a letter for you, and no end of messages. Where can we sit down and talk?"

He led her across the room towards a window recess, in which a tall, fair young man was seated with an evening paper in his hand.

"Let me introduce my friend to you," Courtlaw said. "Arthur, this is Miss Pellissier—Mr. Brendon. Brendon and I are great chums," he went on nervously. "I don't think that the rest of the people here like us very well, do they, Arthur, so we're obliged to be friends."

Anna shook hands with Brendon—a young man also, but older and more self-possessed than Sydney Courtlaw.

"Sydney is quite right, Miss Pellissier," he said. "He and I don't seem to get on at all with our fellow guests, as Mrs. White calls them. You really ought not to stay here and talk to us. It is a most inauspicious start for you."

"Dear me," Anna laughed, "how unfortunate! What ought I to do? Should I be forgiven, do you think, if I were to go and hold that skein of wool for the old lady in the yellow cap?"

"Don't speak of her irreverently," Brendon said, in an awed whisper. "Her husband was a county councillor, and she has a niece who comes to see her in a carriage. I wish she wouldn't look like that over her glasses."

Horace, the manservant, transformed now into the semblance of a correctly garbed waiter, threw open the door.

"Dinner is served, ma'am," he announced to Mrs. White.

There was no rush. Everything was done in a genteel and ordinary way, but on the other hand, there was no lingering. Anna found herself next Sidney Courtlaw, with his friend close at hand. Opposite to her was a sallow-visaged young man whose small tie seemed like a smudge of front of a high, close-drawn collar. obtrusively shiny black across the As a rule, Courtlaw told her softly, he talked right and left, and to everybody throughout the whole of the meal—to-night he was almost silent, and seemed to devote his whole attention to staring at Anna. After the first courses however she scarcely noticed him. Her two new friends did their best to entertain her.

"I can't imagine, Miss Pellisier," Brendon said, leaning towards her, "whatever made you think of coming to stay if only for a week at a Montague Street boarding house. Are you going to write a novel?"

"Not I," she answered gaily. "I came to London unexpectedly, and my friends could not take me in. I had a vague sort of idea that this was the region where one finds apartments, so I told my cabman to drive in this direction while I sat inside his vehicle and endeavored to form a plan of campaign. He brought me past this house, and I thought I would call and leave your brother's letter. Then I saw Mrs. White——"

"No more," Sydney Courtlaw begged, laughingly, "You were booked of course. An unexpected vacancy, wasn't it? Every one comes in on unexpected vacancy."

"And they go!"

"When they get the chance. It really isn't so easy to go as it seems. We have come to the conclusion, Brendon and I, that Mrs. White is psychologically gifted. She throws a sort of spell over us all. We struggle against it at first, but in the end we have to submit. She calls us her guests, but in reality we are her prisoners. We simply can't get away. There's that old gentleman at the end of the table—Bulldog his name. He will tell you confidentially that he simply hates the place. Yet he's been here for six years, and he's as much a fixture as that sham mahogany sideboard. Every one will grumble to you confidentially—Miss Elliott, she's our swagger young lady, you know—up there, next Miss White, she will tell you that it is so out of the world here, so far away from every one one knows. Old Kesterton, choleric-looking individual nearly opposite, will curse the cooking till he's black in the face, but he never misses a dinner. The Semitic looking young man opposite, who seems to have been committing you to memory piecemeal, will tell you that he was never so bored in his life as he has been here. Yet he stays. They all stay!"

"And you yourself?"

Brendon laughed.

"Oh, we are also under the spell," he declared, "but I think that we It is really cheap you know. To are here mainly because it is cheap. appreciate it you should try rooms."

RIDGETOWN, ONT., May 21st, 1913.

"Your "Fruit-a-tives" cured me of Rheumatism. It was the only medicine that made any impression on me. I was a terrible sufferer from Rheumatism. Other advertised remedies were equally unsatisfactory, and I have taken several.

Some neighbor of mine told me that "Fruit-a-tives" helped him, and I took them faithfully every day and the result was marvellous. For over two years now, I have been free from any Rheumatic pains whatever, and give "Fruit-a-tives" the full credit for making a remarkable cure".

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY.

Names of Persons Who Receive Their Mail From Orangeville Mail Carriers.

There are five rural mail delivery routes running out from Orangeville. Below we give the names of the people who have their mail delivered in this way. We have taken considerable trouble to secure accurate lists, consulting Postmaster Harshaw and the carriers themselves for that purpose, and would suggest to our readers the advisability of preserving the names for future reference. It might be explained that on some of the routes the mail is not all made up at Orangeville. On No. 1, for instance, the mail for the parties, whose names appear under Glencross and Mono Centre, while delivered by the carrier, is made up at Glencross and Mono Centre offices. In communicating with any of these persons they should be addressed at the offices under which their names appear. This also applies to persons, whose names appear under Camilla on Route No. 4 and under Mono Mills on Route No. 5.

KEPHALDOL
CURES COLDS AND LA GRIPPE IN HALF A DAY.

Thank the famous Herr Doctor Stohr, of Vienna, Austria, for allowing his personal prescription for relieving pain to be sent to Canada. The Doctor has used "Kephaldol" in thousands of cases, both in private practice and in his hospital clinics. He has proved to the delight of the medical profession that attacks of La Grippe and Colds could be warded off and broken up in 12 hours, by using "Kephaldol" tablets at bedtime and two the first thing in the morning will usually make a complete cure, although in very severe cases, it may be necessary to continue the treatment for a short time, taking one "Kephaldol" tablet every three hours. "Kephaldol" has the pleasant property of relieving all the distressing symptoms of a "bad cold"—clearing the head—stopping the throbbing headaches—easing the pain in the back and limbs—and enabling one to eat and sleep in comfort.

Keep "Kephaldol" in the house, ready to take at the first sign of a cold. If your druggist should not have the 50c tubes of these tablets, write Kephaldol Limited, 31 Latour Street, Montreal.

FLOATING GARDENS.

Many boys and girls have not heard of floating gardens, though now they are an important and deeply interesting feature in the study of agriculture. In Russia especially these floating gardens have proved a great success leading to their formation in other lands. As the oft-quoted adage goes, "Live and learn."

It was noted by farmers along the banks of a river that the best return for their labor was reaped from the produce of land which stretched beside great water courses, the beds of these streams being frequently deepened by dredging. This led to the idea of floating gardens, or farms, some hundreds of feet in length. The next move was to procure large barges, or flat-bottomed boats. These were ladened with rich mold, over which was scattered seed of the desired kind. Then the barges were launched with their precious freight, and started down stream, where a strong current would carry them along. Stations were established in every village through which their course lay, and so welcome were these strange and beautiful visitors that church bells were set ringing and processions formed, headed by the mayor of each village, with words of cheer. As the barges got into a warm clime rich grain or flowers of brilliant hues sprouted. The villagers lined the banks, eager to procure seed, or grain, good for food. The Russian peasantry were poor and this meant relief and plenty. The beautiful blooms told of a great Father's love, and He who said, "Consider the lillies of the field," and "marks a sparrow's fall, made himself felt in nature's exuberance and loveliness.—Exchange.

Orangeville Spring Show Brought Together Large Number of Fine Horses.

The Spring Horse Show, which was held on the Exhibition Grounds on Friday afternoon under the auspices of the Dufferin Agricultural Society, was an unqualified success from every viewpoint. A goodly number of fine horses were shown and the fine day brought out a large gathering of interested farmers and horsemen. The classes were all filled and the horses shown were with few exceptions superb animals. Dr. W. H. Riddell's handsome standard-breds attracted much attention and were greatly admired by the spectators. Dr. James Airth, of Chatsworth, was judge and his decisions were accepted without question. We are glad to learn from the Secretary, Mr. A. E. Annis, that the Show was a success financially and that the Society will have a small balance on hand after paying prizes and defraying all other expenses. Langford-McOutcheon

A very pretty, though quiet, wedding took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Avison, of Mono Centre, on Wednesday, April 15th, when Miss Edith McCutcheon, one of Mono Centre's well-known young ladies, became the bride of Mr. Richard W. Langford, of Canning's Falls. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. A. J. Fowlie, pastor of Burns' Church, Mono Centre, in the presence of a few of the immediate friends of the contracting parties. The bride, who was given away by her uncle, a fine old gentleman of 92 years, looked well in a becoming costume of white silk poplin trimmed with old Irish lace. She carried a shower bouquet. Miss Kathleen Lundy, a relative of the bride, played the wedding march. The ceremony over and congratulations tendered, the happy couple led the way to the dining room, where ample justice was done to an excellent wedding repast. This was followed by singing and violin and piano selections which were heartily enjoyed by all present. Later in the evening Mr. and Mrs. Langford left for the groom's farm, 1st line, east, Mono, amid showers of confetti and the customary good wishes of the guests. The bride's going away dress was alice blue serge with hat and coat to match. The best wishes of their numerous friends follow Mr. and Mrs. Langford to their future home. Mr. and Mrs. Avison are to be congratulated upon the artistic manner in which their home was decorated for the occasion.

THE SKILL OF A MOUSE.

One day a naturalist lay motionless on a fallen log in the forest and silently watched an animal at play in the grass near by. This was a large, brown-backed mouse—a meadow mouse, that had come out from his home under the log, and, when tired of play, had eat up to make his toilet. Using his forepaws as hands, the mouse combed the white fur of his breast and licked himself smooth and sleek. Satisfied at length with his appearance, he began to search food.

He did not have far to go, for a few stalks of wheat grew among the thick weeds near at hand. The mouse was so large that he could probably have bent the stalk down and brought the grain within reach. If not, he could certainly have climbed the stalk. He did not try either of these plans, however, for these were not his ways. Sitting up very straight, he bit through the stalk as high as he could reach. The weeds were so thick that the straw could not fall its full length and the freshly cut end settled down upon the ground, with the straw still erect and the grain out of reach. The mouse bit the straw in two, and again the upper portion settled down. In this way he bit off five lengths of straw before he could bring the grain within reach of his paws. These forepaws were very skillful little hands, and he deftly husked a grain and ate it, sitting erect and holding it to his mouth as naturally as a boy would hold an apple.—Our Animal Friends.

There was a unique christening at Goderich recently. The hero was the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Edward, and he was robed in a handsome and elaborate gown, which had dome similar service for his grandmother and all her children down to this event. Then the baptismal font was over 140 years old, which helped some, and lastly, four generations were represented at the service.

Expect Prosperous Year.

Writing to The Banner from Sturgis, Sask., Mr. Hugh S. Hutchinson, a former resident of this town, says: "The weather conditions are very favorable here now and seeding will be general in a few days. We have had a very mild winter and just enough of snow for good sleighing. Owing to the last fall being dry the land is in fine condition and everything points toward a good prosperous year. Settlers are now coming into the country and before long the money shortness will be a thing of the past."

Melville Liquor Seizure.

Following the recent seizure of four cases of whiskey at Melville Cross, Delmore Densmore, an Orangeville young man, who is in the employ of the C.P.R., gave evidence before Police Magistrate Crawford, of Brampton, on Saturday afternoon respecting an alleged engagement to go to Melville Cross and secure express parcels of liquor consigned to different parties at that point. The station agent at Melville stated that Densmore was the man who brought the orders and delivered to the consignees the greater portion of the liquor shipped to that station. This the young man strenuously denied, stating that he had only visited Melville once for that purpose. The case was enlarged for one week to secure the attendance of the station agent with his books so that the magistrate might ascertain who had signed for the parcels.

Thos. Farnell's Death.

Mr. Thos. Farnell, an old and widely known resident of this town, passed away at the home of his son-in-law, Mr. John McLean, of Palgrave, on Thursday last. Mr. Farnell had made his home with Mrs. McLean since the marriage of his other daughter, Mrs. Harper, about a year ago. Deceased, who had attained to the ripe age of 90 years and 2 months, was of English birth and parentage. He came to this country while a young man, after serving an apprenticeship of seven years at shoe making in England. He worked at his trade in Toronto, or Muddy York as it was then called, for three years, after which he returned to England and induced his parents and family to try their fortunes in Canada. Mr. Farnell was the oldest of a family of thirteen, of whom two sisters are still living. On Sept. 14th, 1854 he was married to Elizabeth Golden, a sister of the late James Golden, of Amaranth. The young couple settled down to the realities of life on lot 5, con. A., East Garafraxa, close to what is now known as The Maples. Here Mrs. Farnell died on Oct. 27th, 1862, leaving a family of three sons and two daughters. The three sons and one daughter still survive, namely, William J., of Crombie, Thomas, of Donald, Ont., James, of Wellington, Prince Edward County, and Mrs. John Rolley, of Penetanguishene. On Nov. 14th, 1863, the subject of our sketch married Jane Robinson, of Orangeville, who died on Aug. 24th, 1894, leaving three of a family, namely, Mrs. Geo. Sanderson, now of Toronto, Mrs. John McLean, Palgrave, and Mrs. Ed. J. Harper, Notre Dame, Sask. Deceased is also survived by 28 granddchildren and 1 great grandchild. Mr. Farnell gave up farming in 1874 and moved to Orangeville, residing here continuously until his removal to Palgrave a year ago. He was a man of unusual strength and vitality and, despite his weight of years, was hale and vigorous up to a comparatively short time before his demise. The remains were brought to Orangeville on Saturday, the interment taking place in the Forest Lawn cemetery immediately after the arrival of the funeral cortege. The service at the grave was conducted by Rev. W. W. Anglin, of Palgrave, and Rev. A. E. de St. Dalmas, of Orangeville. The pallbearers were Messrs. Archie Farnell, of Fergus, Frank Farnell, of Wellington, Ont., Frank Rowley, Ballycroy, Meade Cruikshank, Harry May and Elmer Richardson, of Orangeville.

John Graham

The township of Caledon lost a fine old citizen on Tuesday morning of this week when John Graham, who lived on lot 7, concession 2, passed to his rest. Mr. Graham was eighty years of age, and was widely known and esteemed. He resided on the farm, where he died, for more than half a century, and was well versed in the early history of the township. General debility caused by old age was the cause of death. His wife, who was formerly Mary Ann Petch, and four sons, survive him. Mr. and Mrs. Graham celebrated their golden wedding in the spring of 1913. The funeral took place this afternoon to the Stone Church Cemetery. The township of Caledon has sustained a loss in the death of one of its fine old farmers, whose death is mourned not only by the members of the family, but by many old friends of the deceased.—Brampton Conservator.

BORN.

SANDERSON—In Orangeville on Wednesday, April 15th, 1914, to Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Sanderson, a daughter.

The Late Mrs. J. J. Still

The remains of the late Mrs. J. J. Still, whose death in Pasadena, Cal., was reported in last week's Banner, reached town on Tuesday morning, accompanied by her husband and daughter. The body was taken to the home of Mrs. Burns Young on East Broadway, where the remains were viewed by many of the departed woman's friends in this vicinity. The funeral was held to the Forest Lawn Cemetery yesterday afternoon, the casket being first taken to St. Andrew's Church, where an impressive funeral service was conducted by the pastor, Rev. W. M. Morris, and Revs. R. S. Scott, of Hillsburg, and Dr. Armstrong, of Alton. There were numerous floral tributes from Pasadena friends, a wreath from the sisters and a wreath from the Board of Managers of St. Andrew's Church, North Toronto. As stated last week, Mrs. Still was a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Young, old residents of Erin township and afterwards citizens of this town. She is survived by three brothers and four sisters, namely, Samuel Young, of Guelph, W. W. Young, of Erin, A. E. Young, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Mrs. (Rev.) R. Fowlie, of Collingwood, Mrs. Geo. Ballentyne, of Buxton, Mrs. D. McKinnon, of Guelph, and Mrs. Wm. Nodwell, of Erin. The brothers and sisters were all here for the funeral, except Mr. A. E. Young, of Sault Ste. Marie. Besides her husband Mrs. Young leaves one daughter, Evelyn, a girl of 14 years. The husband, daughter and relatives have the sympathy of all in their trying bereavement.

Mr. Still left Pasadena with his wife's body at 8 o'clock on Friday morning, so that he made the long journey in slightly over four days. Service was held in the undertaker's chapel in Pasadena on Thursday evening, Rev. Mr. Spaulding officiating. The pallbearers here yesterday were Messrs. Harvey and Ed. Nodwell, Gordon and Wallace Young, Burns McKinnon and Elmer Still.

—The funeral of the late Angus Ferguson, whose death was reported last week, was held to the Forest Lawn Cemetery on Friday afternoon. Rev. G. W. Tebbs was the officiating clergyman. The deceased is survived by a sister in Dundalk and a brother and sister in Toronto.

CORRECTED.

A young man had been calling now and then on a young lady, when one night, as he sat in the parlor waiting for her to come down, her mother entered the room instead and asked him, in a very stern and grave way, what his intentions were.

He turned very red and was about to stammer some incoherent reply, when suddenly the young lady called down from the head of the stairs.

"Mamma, mamma, that is not the one."

Mr. C. S. Cameron, M.P.P., has obtained legislative grants for the township of Keppel and the township of Sarawak, for improvements of their roads. The supplementary estimates for this year were brought down in the provincial legislature on Thursday, April 9th, and the township of Keppel is given two thousands dollars under the Colonization Roads Act of 1913, the conditions being that the township of Keppel must spend an equal amount for the building of roads in this township. The township of Sarawak is given a special grant of five hundred dollars for the main gravel road passing from north to south through the township to Sarawak.

THIS WOMAN'S SICKNESS

Quickly Yielded To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Baltimore, Md. — "I am more than glad to tell what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I suffered dreadful pains and was very irregular. I became alarmed and sent for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it regularly until I was without a cramp or pain and felt like another person, and it has now been six months since I took any medicine at all. I hope my little note will assist you in helping other women. I now feel perfectly well and in the best of health." — Mrs. AUGUST W. KONDNER, 1632 Hollins Street, Baltimore, Md.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

THE "GIDEON" BIBLES.

These Books Are Often Means of Doing Much Good.

Those who travel through the province and use the hotels have doubtless frequently met with the Bibles placed by the Gideons (Christian Commercial Travellers' Association) in the hotel rooms. One of the hotels of this town has just been presented with a supply of Bibles by this Association for this purpose, and in all nearly 16,000 copies are now in the hotels of Ontario. Could these volumes speak, many of them would tell a remarkable story.

Whence They Came.

In the first place the way they arrived at the hotel is interesting. At some time or another, a commercial traveller wearing the well-known Gideon button entered the hotel, fixed up for a room, and stayed the day or two necessary for the transaction of his business in the town. Bun before leaving leaving he approached the proprietor: "Have you not the Gideon Bible in your rooms?" "No," was the reply, but the hotelman added that he had seen the books in other houses, and would not at all mind having them also, if he only knew how to get them. The Gideon said that the books would be supplied freely if he would consent to having them placed in his rooms. So it came about that within a few days or weeks each room was supplied with a copy of the Word of God, in a convenient-sized and clear-print volume; and perhaps, as happens in the majority of cases, the proprietor himself had paid the express charges on the package.

Some Personal Experiences.

Once in its place the book starts upon its interesting career. Many a time it brings encouragement and cheer to a weary heart. One man wrote to the Gideon Office: "I have experienced their benefit there, and know that others have too. The relief and consolation that come to a tired soul in reading the Word can be had nowhere else. I should like to be enrolled as a member."

Others are awakened out of indifference. A man entered his room in a hotel down east one night under the influence of drink. In the same room lay a copy of the Bible, and this he kicked round the room in his drunken frenzy. Returning to Toronto he hired a room at a hotel, and here, while perfectly sober, another Gideon faced him. It seemed as though this book were following him everywhere, and fear and trembling seized him, as he recalled his former abuse of it. In this state he called for some commercial men whom he knew to be Christians. These stayed with him through the night, not leaving him till he knew his sin pardoned through the Lord Jesus Christ.

A Porter's Testimony.

W. D. Quigley, a Gideon travelling man, was spending a night at Welland, Ont., and called in at a Mission there. During the meeting he gave his testimony, remarking also that he was a Gideon. As soon as he resumed his seat, another rose and said: "I am glad to meet a live Gideon, having often wondered in past days who they were. I am a hotel porter, and had been accustomed for a good while to see the Gideon Bibles in hotels where I worked, but was always afraid of them, thinking they belonged to some new religion. Finding one at last in my room in this city, I began to read it, and was led to see that I was a lost sinner. This conviction so wrought upon me that I came to this mission and here found Christ as my Saviour.::

No, it is not in vain that the Word of God is introduced into these places. Many other very interesting accounts could be given of the useful ministry exercised by it in the hotels.

YOU CAN'T EARN MONEY WHEN YOU'RE LAID UP.

There are a lot of people in this town who cannot afford to be sick. Perhaps none of you feel that you can, but certainly some of you can't, for as soon as you are sick, your wages stop and worry and debts begin to pile up. The sensible thing thing for you to do to do, as soon as you feel run down and worn out, no matter what the cause, is to take something just as quick as you can to build up strength and health. Make yourself more comfortable and provide against serious sickness.

We don't believe there is any other medicine made that will do as much towards saving your health and thus helping you save your money as Rexall Olive Oil Emulsion. It is a medicine that gets right at the trouble and relieves it by toning the nerves, enriching the blood, and giving new strength and health to the whole body. It doesn't do this by means of alcohol or habit forming drugs, because it contains none. Its strength and health-giving power is due to pure Olive Oil and the Hypophosphites, long endorsed by successful physicians, the one for its tonic value. Here for the first time, they are combined, and the result is a real nerve, blood and body-building medicine—a real strengthener that we are proud to tell you about. You don't need to hesitate about using it, because if it doesn't do all we say it will and satisfy you in every way, it will cost you nothing. If it doesn't make you strong and well again, come back and get your money. It will be given to you without word or question. Sold only at the more than 7,000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only by us. $1.00. T. F. & T. J. Brown, Druggists, Orangeville, Ont.

The Creemore Star tells of a farmer who got on his barn on a recent breezy day to do some shingling, and while there the wind blew the ladder down. As there was no help available to put the ladder up again, he was obliged to tear a hole through the roof to get a way down.

OUR GIRLS.

There are just two things that will keep girls straight at the age when they begin to think of longer dresses, and beaux. One is plain clothes and the other is home duties. The girls we see making fools of themselves are almost invariably over-dressed. They wear duds that women of thirty should hesitate about wearing.

A little girl with too many and too costly clothes on her back gets self-conscious and vain and loves admiration—and you grown-ups know the rest of it. A simple pure-hearted girl who has a place in a home, home work and home duties, has her heart there, and no boy can steal it. Even when maturity comes, and a real man comes, and a real affair of her heart comes, will such a girl leave home, and then only after a heart reading. But a girl who is at home only at the table and late bed time won't love that home. It makes things sacred. The child whose home memories are not hallowed by work, who is not needed, and does not feel the need, will not love home. And if she does not love the home of her girlhood, she will love no other. She will go anywhere for anything. Home will mean nothing to such a woman, and if she is respectable, she will only lack the opportunity to be a bad woman, and is good only through circumstances or by the necessity of an ugly face. She will curse any man she marries.

The mothers of this town, who are responsible for the girls who grace the streets should stop and think what they are doing. These girls are no longer children. They are at an impressionable age. Where will you have their impress come from—from the riff-raff of the streets, or from home? It is for the mothers of this town to settle the question.

HE DID NOT UNDERSTAND.

Pat had been seized with violent pains and was hurried to a hospital. The physician in charge, after diagnosis, informed him that he had appendicitis, and that an operation was necessary as his appendix must be removed immediately.

Pat had not the least idea of what an appendix was, and so informed the physician, who laughingly told him that after the operation he would leave the appendix in the window so he could see it when he was able to sit up.

Some days after the operation, Pat's curiousity got the better of him, and he raised up in bed to take a look at his appendix. To his amazement a monkey was sitting on the windowsill and when he saw Pat he began to make faces and chatter at a rapid rate. The astonished monkey a long, hard look, and then exclaimed: "Don't you do that, me boy, don't do that. Can't you see your mother is a very sick man, indeed?"

THE BANNER

THE BANNER, APRIL 30th, 1914.

A $7,000 Verdict.

In the Toronto Assize Court on Friday a jury gave the plaintiff a verdict for $7000 in the Davis vs. Wettlaufer breach of promise suit. The finding of the jury followed a three days trial by Mr. Justice Latchford, the last day being largely occupied with the addresses of counsel and the Judge. The plaintiff was Miss May Davis, who sued for $15,000 for breach of promise. The defendant, George Wettlaufer, the young woman's former employer, is an elderly man now resident in Toronto. Both of the parties formerly resided in Buffalo. The trial created considerable local interest from the fact that the defendant is the father of W. L. Wettlaufer, formerly of The Queen's hotel, Orangeville. A stay of thirty days was granted to give defendant's counsel opportunity to appeal should he decide to carry the case to a higher court.

Wettlaufer's conduct and relations with the plaintiff in the action came in for scathing denunciation, not only from the counsel for Miss Davis, but from Mr. Justice Latchford, who heard the case.

"With the blackguardism of this man's act in seducing this young woman you have nothing to do," said the Justice to the jury. "If a man had broken a typewriter or damaged the table it stood upon he probably would be sent to jail, but an employer may ruin the life of a woman, honestly born, tenderly nurtured, carefully educated, and escape responsibility." He went on to say undoubtedly the girl had been unfairly treated in entering into the agreement with Wettlaufer.

Mr. Robert Harding, counsel for plaintiff, denounced the defendant in scathing terms, declaring that he was now living in Toronto with another woman, and reading an extract alleged to have been written by the defendant to the plaintiff that they were as much man and wife in the sight of God as any other man and wife.

The close of the trial was marked by a sensational incident in the arrest of Constable McMullen, court crier, on the charge of perjury. McMullen had given evidence for Miss Davis and his arrest was the result of an information laid by Wettlaufer. McMullen was called outside and placed under arrest while the Court was still in progress. He was allowed his freedom on bail of $200 furnished by Mr. James McCormick, Grosvenor St.

Important Rule.

It is strictly against the rules of the Post Office Department to distribute bills or any kind of mail matter in rural mail boxes unless full postage is paid thereon and carriers are instructed to collect all such deposits and deliver them at the post office, where they will be treated as "dead" matter. This a point in connection with the rural mail delivery system that is not generally known and we give a piece of information. Any person, however, can deposit a full prepaid letter or parcel in a rural mail box for any patron along the same route and it will be delivered by the carrier as if mailed at a post office. It is necessary, however, that the carrier obliterate or deface the stamp before placing it in the box to which it is addressed.

Bank Buys Bonds.

We understand that the Sterling Bank has purchased Orangeville's $30,000 issue of debentures at 98¼ and accrued interest. The debentures, which bear 5 per cent. interest, were issued to provide for the loan to J. M. Dods. The price at which they were sold is considered excellent in view of the condition of the money market. Considerable comment is being made on the purchase as indicating the interest shown by the local Branch of the Bank in the affairs of the town.

License Worth $50.000.

Last week the Board of Arbitrators appointed to determine the value of the license of the Hotel Clarke, Adelaide and Simcoe streets, Toronto, handed down judgment awarding Mr. Harry Clarke, the present holder of the license and a former landlord of the Gordon house here, $50,000 for the goodwill and the business. Mr. Clarke held a ten year lease, which he purchased from Mr. C. A. Burns, the proprietor, on the consideration that at the expiration of the lease the matter of adjusting the value of the business be referred to a Board of Arbitrators, the decision of which was to be recognized as final in the settlement of the affairs of the business.

Mr. Clarke's lease expired in April 1913, and five months later a board comprising Messrs. Thomas Hook, acting for Mr. Clarke; O. B. Sheppard, representing Mr. Burns, with County Crown Attorney Greer as official referee, was appointed to take evidence respecting the value of the license and good-will of the business.

The decision of the arbitrators was unanimous. It is understood that the business will be taken over immediately by Mr. Burns.

A TERRIBLE FATALITY

R. H. Harrison Meets Instant Death in a Frightful Manner.

Trousers Leg Caught by Coupling and Body Thrown Around Shafting.

Robert H. Harrison, the proprietor of the saw mill and millyard at the corner of East Broadway and Wellington St., met with a frightful death about 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. The driving belt was not working satisfactorily and Harrison stepped over the shaft to adjust the belt tightener. In some way the end of the bolt, which projected from a "knuckle" on the rapidly revolving shaft that drives the saw, caught the bottom of his trousers' leg and whirled him to instant death. Harrison's father-in-law, Thos. J. Robinson, a Caledon farmer, who happened to be standing nearby, realizing what was happening, made an attempt to seize the unfortunate man for the purpose of pulling him away, but was struck with great force by the body and knocked to the ground close to the large circular saw. The noise made by the tearing clothing and the body as it was hurled about by the revolving machinery brought the mill employees and some citizens who happened to be in the millyard running to the spot. It also caused Engineer David Still to throw off the belt, stopping the machinery within a couple of minutes after the accident. When found Harrison's lifeless body was lying on the ground close to the shaft. With the exception of his boots and a woollen undershirt, practically every bit of clothing was torn off the body. Dr. T. H. Henry was summoned by telephone and was soon upon the scene. Under the doctor's orders the remains were conveyed to the Harrison home on Wellington St., where an examination was made to ascertain the nature and extent of the injuries. It was found that the base of the skull had been badly fractured, the neck, shoulder blade and one of the thighs broken. There were also other injuries of a severe nature. Death was instantaneous.

It is difficult to determine just how Harrison came to get caught. He was a careful man and had several years experience with machinery. Robert. Hillock, the tail sawyer, says he was using a wrench to adjust the belt tightener. It is thought the wrench must have slipped while under pressure and that when shifting his foot to regain his balance the unfortunate man's trousers leg came in contact with the coupling. The day was dark and misty and the belting had become quite wet causing it to run unsatisfactorily. A short time before his death Harrison had been obliged to shut down in order to lace the belt.

The deceased, who was about 33 years of age, was an honest, hard-working man of excellent habits and character. He bought the saw mill and yard on Wellington street from Mr. Ed. Armstrong about 18 months ago. About the same time he purchased Mr. Armstrong's residence on Wellington St., and shortly afterwards moved here from Mono Mills. He has done a thriving business since coming to the town, cutting logs during the winter and early summer and following the occupation of thresher during the autumn months. He was a very handy man with tools or machinery and was quite an expert carpenter and framer. He had almost finished work in the local yard, having only two or three logs to saw when he met his death. He had engaged to saw several yards in the country and was to have moved his outfit to a large yard west of Camilla this week.

Deceased was a native of Mono township, the family residing in the Relessey neighborhood until about 12 years ago. While living in Mono, one of the deceased's brothers, John Harrison, was instantly killed in the bush by a blow from a limb of a tree, which was being felled. Harrison was married in March, 1912, to Lily Florence Robinson, daughter of Mr. T. J. Robinson, of the Mono-Caledon townline. There is one child, a boy about one year old. He is also survived by his aged mother, two brothers, Albert and William Harrison, of Caledon, and three sisters, Mrs. W. J. Foster, Mono, Mrs. R. J. Robinson, townline Mono and Caledon, and Miss Georgina, Caledon. The news of her husband's sad death was a terrible shock to the young wife, who is almost prostrated with grief.

Upon learning of the awful occurrence, Crown Attorney McKay and Dr. James Henry decided that it would be advisable to hold an inquest, for the purpose of bringing out the facts connected with the tragedy. Particulars are given elsewhere.

Saturday afternoon, Sunday and Monday the millyard was visited by hundreds of people anxious to get a look at the place, where the fatality occurred.

The funeral, which was held from the home to Greenwood cemetery on Monday afternoon was the occasion of one of the largest gatherings of the kind in Orangeville for years. An immense concourse assembled at the home, where an impressive service was held by Rev. G. W. Tebbs, rector of St. Mark's Church, and Rev. J. A. Black, of Mono Mills. Citizens of all classes and denominations united with the many friends and neighbors from the townships of Mono and Caledon in paying a last mark of respect. The deceased was identified with the Orange Order being a member and Past Master of Mona Britons L.O.L. No. 259. Nearly 200 members of the Order were present in full regalia and took part in the impressive burial ritual of the Society at the grave. The service was read by Rev. Bro. G. W. Tebbs and Bro. Chas. Crombie, Chaplain of L.O.L. No. 259. This was followed by the service of the Black Order, which was read by Sir Knights B. McGuire, Deputy Preceptor, and A. D. McKitrick. The pallbearers, who were all members of L.O.L. 259, were Bros. O. Woodland, Elgin and Edward Holmes, George and Dolson Adair and Fred. McBrien. There were about 100 rigs in the procession from the house to the grave. Among the many beautiful floral wreaths, which testified to the all pervading sorrow which the sad death has caused, were designs from Orangeville Black Preceptory and Mona Britons L.O.L. 259, and wreaths from the wife, the brothers and the Long family, of Georgetown. Needless to say there is widespread sorrow and sympathy for the young widow in her cruel bereavement.

ELECTRICITY ON THE FARM

An Oxford Township Farmer Puts Hydro Power to Many Uses.

Uses Current to Fill Silo and Expects to Run Threshing Outfit in Same Way.

Now that the possibilities of Hydro power are beginning to engage the minds of the farmers in this district, it may be interesting to relate the experience of Mr. D. W. Clark, a West Oxford farmer, who has been using electric power from a local stepping down station for the last two or three years. Mr. Clark uses the power for filling his silo, which he says he can do more cheaply, quickly and satisfactorily than by the methods ordinarily used. With the aid of an electric motor 4 men were able to put away 28 loads of corn in a day at a cost of 48 cents. The filling is spread over several days instead of being all done at once and in this way much more corn can be put into the silo.

A representative of the Toronto Globe tells of his visit to Mr. Clark's farm in company with Hon. Adam Beck and Mr. Purcell, one of the Hydro Power Commission's engineers. He says':—

"Will your silo hold all your corn?" I asked.

"No, and here again Hydro power is valuable. Before I start filling I cut a lot of green corn. Then when the silo is filled to the brim I can go on cutting the rest of the corn for feed day by day as I want it. When I want to use the feed at the time I simply disconnect the carrier from the cutting box and the ensilage drops through this chute down to the feed room in the stable. It is possible to go on cutting corn from the field this way as long as you can haul it in."

During the winter the cutting box is utilized to cut straw for mixing with the ensilage. The same motor will this winter furnish the power for the No. 2 Little Giant thresher which Mr. Clark intends to purchase shortly. Once obtained, this threshing machine will be instantly available for use at any time during the year, and the threshing of grain may be spread over the entire winter months, ensuring convenience and thoroughness in the process. Mr. Clark will probably be the first man in the Province to own and operate by Hydro power his own individual outfit, consisting of threshing machine, cutting box and silo-filler, with carriers. It is this individual outfit which Hon. Mr. Beck hopes to see in general use throughout Ontario.

The outfit for ensilage cutting, silo-filling, water-pumping, etc., at present in use on Mr. Clark's farm entailed an initial outlay of about $150. The low cost of operation is shown from the item already instanced re the putting away of 28 loads at a power cost of 48 cents.

"Last year I put about one hundred loads into the silo at a total power cost of one dollar and nineteen cents," declared Mr. Clark. "I was surprised at the cost, I assure you. I milk twenty-eight cows, and this winter I hope to install a milking machine as well as my own thresher. There is nothing like making good use of cheap power. Besides the uses to which you have seen the motor put to-day, I might mention that I use it for supplying running water to my kitchen and bathroom, and water to every stall in the stable; for pulping turnips, for running an emery wheel and grindstone, and for lighting both house and barn. The whole power cost for the first twelve months in which I used it, silo-filling and all, was only sixty-six dollars. Am I satisfied? There isn't a more tickled farmer in the Province of Ontario! This was about the first farm in Ontario on which Hydro was given a good trial, and I hope that I may not see the day when it will have to do without it. No, it isn't because Mr. Beck is listening to me; I would tell you the same if he were in London."

THE HARRISON INQUEST

Mill Employes and Citizens give Evidence Relating to Fatality.

Jury Brings in Verdict of Accidental Death and Makes Recommendation in Favor of Protecting Machinery Shafting.

The death of the late Robert H. Harrison, the victim of the regrettable accident last Saturday afternoon, was made the subject of an inquiry by Dr. James Henry and a Coroner's jury. The inquest was held in the Town Hall on Saturday night. Evidence relating to the sad fatality was given by the mill employees, Mr. T. J. Robinson, father-in-law of the unfortunate man, several citizens who happened to be in the mill yard or vicinity at the time and Dr. T. H. Henry, who made an examination of the body shortly after the accident. The inquest attracted a large crowd of people, who followed the evidence with the closest interest.

Before hearing the evidence, the jury viewed the body at the Harrison home and also visited the millyard where the accident occurred. The jurors were Thos. Arnott, W. Fairbairn, Robt. Welbourne, John Bagnell, Wm. Watt, J. E. Thompson, James Ewing, Fred. Manning and Harry Bailey.

Robert Hillock, who was employed as tail sawyer in Harrison's mill, told the Coroner that he was priming the pump when he heard shouting and on running back found the deceased's father-in-law, T. J. Robinson, lying beside the shafting and the clothing of the deceased wound around the shafting with his body lying beside it bathed in blood and the head badly injured. He shoved Robinson to one side and started to unwind the clothes from the shafting. He then picked up Harrison's money, watch and chain. Harrison, witness said, was always very careful around the machinery. At the time of his death he was engaged putting the tightener down and had a wrench in his hand to tighten the bolts. Witness was of the opinion that the wrench slipped off the nut, causing Harrison to fall against the knuckle. The body was completely stripped of clothing, with the exception of the undershirt and boots. Witness was of the opinion that the unfortunate man's body was carried under the shafting, but could not say how often. The machinery was stopped within two or three minutes. It was necessary, Hillock said, to have the shafting exposed to see when the belt would slacken.

Thos. J. Robinson, father-in-law of the deceased, testified that he was present when the accident ocurred. Harrison, he said, was adjusting the big belt with the tightener to make it run straight on the pulley. He was in the act of removing the nut and had his foot on a board, when it slipped and the coupling of the shaft caught the leg of his trousers. He was whirled around the shaft at least once. Witness attempted to seize him, but was struck by the body and knocked down. Harrison was dead when he (witness) was picked up by Bob Hillock. Harrison was the owner of the mill and was a very careful man with about three years' experience with machinery.

David Still, the engineer, first learned of the fatality, when he heard Hillock call out "he is killed." He at once shut down the engine. He had worked for Harrison for some time and considered him a careful man. He thought the previous witness, Mr. Robinson, had given a correct version of the way the accident happened. The day was damp and foggy and the belt was damp. The saw was going about 400 revolutions a minute. The belt was more liable to slip in wet weather.

Dr. T. H. Henry deposed that he learned of the accident from Mr. James Armstrong, who phoned him. He visited the scene of the accident, notified the Coroner and Crown Attorney and had the body removed to the deceased's home, where he made an examination of the remains. On the right of the head to the back the skull was crushed in. A blow on the head had evidently caused a severe fracture of the base of the skull. Death had been instantaneous. The right shoulder blade and right hip were fractured. There was a comminuted fracture of both bones of the forearm of the right arm and the left thigh was severely bruised. The neck was also broken.

John Cruikshank, who was standing about fifteen feet away when Harrison met his death, agreed with Robt. Hillock's version of the manner in which the accident occurred. He heard a flopping noise and running toward the shaft found deceased lying under the shaft with his clothing torn off. He believed the body had gone around the shaft several times. Deceased had warned witness and he had often heard him warn other people to be careful of the shafting.

Reuben Moffatt, who was helping the tail sawyer, saw the body lying under the shaft, but was unable to throw any new light on the accident.

James Armstrong said that the deceased was a very careful man, but expressed the opinion that the shafting should have been boxed in. The saw was made to turn about 400 revolutions a minute.

Alex. Dalgleish was standing with John Cruikshank when Harrison met his death and corroborated his version of the fatality. He heard the noise of the body as it was whirled around the shaft. Witness helped to take out the body. Deceased gasped once or twice as he was being taken out.

After deliberating upon the evidence and the address of the Coroner the jury brought in the following verdict:—

"We find that Robert H. Harrison came to his death at the Town of Orangeville on the 25th day of April, 1914, through an accident caused by his clothing coming in contact with the coupling of an open shaft revolving at the rate of about 400 revolutions per minute, whereby he was whirled around and died immediately as a result of his injuries.

"The jury strongly recommends that in future such shafts and couplings in all sawmills, threshing outfits and other machinery should be covered and protected as far as possible in order to prevent future accidents."

The terrible accident which terminated the life of Mr. Robert H. Harrison in his sawmill in Orangeville has cast a feeling of sadness over the whole community. As a sawyer, thresher, framer, carpenter, and for a while a resident of the neighborhood he was well known and most highly respected for his honesty and straightforwardness in all his dealings as well as his energetic application to anything he had undertaken to do. Needless to say the passing out of a man like him means a serious loss to both the business and moral life of any neighborhood, and the sincerest sympathy is extended to the bereaved wife and her little child, who are also well known here.

The musical programme consisted of a solo by Mr. Cooney, of Laurel, a vocal duet by Miss Sprae Lathwell and Lieut. Luxton, Orangeville, and cornet solos by Lieut. Luxton, Orangeville. Resolution of Condolence

The following resolution of condolence with the widow and family of the late Robt. McCutcheon was passed by Mono Mills L.O.L. No. 192 at a recent meeting.

To the Wife and Family of the late Robt. McCutcheon:

Having heard with deep regret of the great loss you have sustained in the death of your beloved husband and father, we, the officers and members of L.O.L. No. 192, hereby tender you our sympathy and condolence in your sad bereavement. By his death we have lost a true friend and member and you a loving and affectionate husband and father. May your loss be his eternal gain. We realize how little any words of ours can relieve your sorrow, but since our Heavenly Father in His Infinite Wisdom has seen fit to call him hence may He comfort you and enable you to bear your loss with Christian fortitude and resignation to His Divine will and to say, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

Death of Rich. Gray.

Mr. Richard Gray, one of the oldest residents of Amaranth, passed away at the home of his son, Mr. Frank Gray, Laurel, last Friday at the ripe age of 82 years. The late Mr. Gray was born in England, but came to this country with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Gray, when a mere boy. The family settled in Laurel, which was then practically covered with bush. About 55 years ago the subject of our notice married Miss Ann Banks, a daughter of the late John Banks. His wife died 37 years ago. He is survived by one son, Frank J., who conducts a blacksmith and carriage business in Laurel, and five daughters. The latter are Mrs. R. Beecham and Mrs. D. Sailes, Brampton, Mrs. John Mason, Hamilton, Mrs. E. Sanderson, Queensville, and Mrs. F. C. Westman, London. Mr. Gray was the first blacksmith in Laurel. The land on which the village now stands was then covered with bush and it was first necessary to fell the timber and clear a space for the blacksmith shop. In religion the deceased was a Methodist and in politics a Reformer. There was a large attendance at the funeral, which was held to Laurel cemetery on Sunday afternoon. Rev. J. R. Bell and Rev. J. S. Stevenson conducted the services at the house and grave.

Three ladies as they shot in an observation car Californiaward through the superbest scenery in the world fell to talking about dogs.

"I don't know a thing about dogs," said the first lady. "They're all just dogs to me. If I have a preference, though, it's for the cob."

"Cobs are nice—so affectionate," agreed the second lady. "But I'm no dog sharp either. Still, I must say my choice of a dog would be a mustang. They're such good watch dogs, aren't they?"

"I don't know one dog from another," said the third lady. "I just divide them into big dogs and little dogs. I'm very fond of a hackney, though—I mean, of course, for a lap dog."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Janet's aunt, noticing this, one day suggested that she let her father go downtown alone some time, jokingly adding, "Men do not like to have women always tagging along."

"Aye, ahnty, but he wahnts me," explained Janet earnestly. "He canna thole to stir oot o' the hoose his lane. Ye wadna beleeve hoo fasht he is anywhere wi'oot me. Not So Dutiful.

"Where will Mrs. Dobs go now that both her daughters are married—to her son-in-law's house in Birmingham or to that of her son-in-law in Leeds?"

"One wants her in Birmingham, and the other wishes she would go to Leeds."

"What dutiful sons-in-law!"

"I beg your pardon. The one in Birmingham wants her in Leeds; the one in Leeds wants her in Birmingham."—London Tit-Bits.

Why We Guarantee This Stomach Remedy

If there are one hundred people in this town who suffer from indigestion, dyspepsia, or any other form of stomach complaint, we believe we can suggest a remedy that will relieve at least ninety-eight of them, and perhaps every one of the hundred. We'll do more than suggest a remedy—we'll promise to give back the money to each and every one of the hundred that are not relieved. That's how much faith we have in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets.

Containing Pepsin and Bismuth, two of the greatest digestive aids known to medical science, as well as other necessary ingredients, Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets soothe the inflamed stomach lining, aid the secretion of gastric juice, check distress and heartburn, promote regular bowel action and make it possible for you to eat what you like and as much as you like without fear of consequences.

Don't suffer any longer from dyspepsia or indigestion. Use Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, and you will be just as enthusiastic about them as we are, and just as ready to urge them on your friends. Sold only at the Rexall Stores, and in this town only by us. Three sizes, 25c, 50c and $1.00. T. F. & T. J. Brown, Druggists, Orangeville, Ont.

I want all women to know how Dr. Chases Nerve Food helped me. Mrs. M. A South

A Message to Women

From one who has learned to appreciate Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Modern life whether in the office, factory or home means an enormous strain on the more delicate nervous system of women. Whether it is the girl behind the counter or the lady going the round of society functions, the nerves are at high tension and require an abundance of rich, red blood if health is to be maintained.

Because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood, it is eminently successful in curing the ailments which cause the greater part of woman's suffering and has become duly popular among those who have learned of its merits.

Mrs. M. A. South, Grand Prairie, Alta., writes:—"I cannot begin to tell you how much good Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has done me. I was all run down, had no appetite, and suffered each month in a way only women will understand. After having followed this treatment for some weeks I feel like a different woman, sleep well, have a good appetite and am able to do my own work, even during the time that I formerly had so much suffering. I have no pains whatever now, which is an entirely new experience for me. You may publish this letter as I want all women to know how Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has helped me, and I feel sure it will do as much for any woman."

BAD RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

James Fulton, who works L. Menary's farm, Amaranth township, met with a serious accident Saturday afternoon. He had two teams hitched to a cultivator, three young colts and an experienced horse, and in some unexplained manner they ran away. The horses cleared a wire fence taking the cultivator with them, coming to a stop at a rail fence. Mrs. Fulton from the house saw the horses crossing the fields and called to Mr. Menary and R. McConachie, who happened to be around the place. They found Mr. Fulton unconscious on the ground and apparently badly hurt. One wheel passed over his body, a tooth of the machine almost severed one of his ears and another gave him a gash on the cheek, while a bolt or some blunt thing made a bad puncture in the flesh. A doctor had to put in sixteen stitches to close the wounds, which, while painful, are not expected to result seriously.—Star & Vidette.

FOR FOUR MONTHS.

Jimmie Farrell, of Streetsville Junction, will do Hard Labor this Time.

For the fifteenth time James Farrell was convicted for keeping liquor for sale and other offences against the License Act on coming before the magistrate here on Saturday afternoon last. Inspector Orr visited the premises of Mr. Farrell at Streetsville Junction on April 3rd, and saw the driver of the brewery wagon just leaving the yard. Hearing the sound of hammering from the kitchen the inspector made his way thither and was met at the door by Farrell, who said no when asked by Mr. Orr if there was a keg there for him and shut the kitchen door behind him. Mr. Orr entered the room and found a full keg of ale standing in the middle of the kitchen, apparantly with the tap just put in. He seized the keg and took it away with him, sending a quantity of the liquor to be analyzed. Farrell was summoned again to answer the charge of keeping liquor for sale. He was defended by Mr. Henderson, of Toronto. Farrell swore positively that he had had the keg for four months, that it was presented to him by the foreman of a construction gang at that time, and that he had been drinking it from time to time; that the brewery man left no keg that day, and that he was observing the law strictly, not having sold a drop since last fall. His daughter also gave evidence to the same effect, although she admitted that her father might have changed the keg from time to time without her knowledge. Farrell directly contradicted the evidence of the inspector when he swore that the keg was almost empty. The latter still had the keg in his possession when the case was heard and could prove that it was almost full, he having sent only a small quantity to the analyst. Farrell was found guilty and sentenced to four months in gaol with hard labor.—Brampton Conservator.

Collingwood's oldest citizen, Mr. James Macdonald, celebrated his 104th birthday on the 7th of this month. He was born in 1810, and remembered as a youngster the first news received of the Battle of Waterloo.

The application of Samuel Montgomery, of Toronto, for a writ of habeas corpus directing G. Marshall, of Dundalk, to produce Ernest Montgomery, the seven year old son of the applicant, in court so that he might be restored to the custody of his father was heard at Osgoode Hall and granted by Mr. Justice Middleton.

This Farmer Shows How Good Roads Benefit

MR. J. J. HOUSTON, who lives on a road that has lately been improved, in Lauderdale County Mississippi, makes the common-sense statement which follows:

"I have never made an investment for which I have gotten as much financial returns and satisfaction out of as I have out of this road. The advancement in property alone has been sufficient to four or five times pay the whole cost of construction, and I don't think the county could make any investment that would bring in as much returns as to build a network of them all over it. It is such a good thing that I want every man in the county to have one just like it, and I am willing to pay my part of the taxes to help him get it."

Build Concrete Roads

Then your road taxes will be invested and not merely spent. They will return many times the amount they cost, and those returns will show in the increased valuation of your property, the lessened cost of marketing your produce, the longer life of your horses and vehicles, the greater conveniences and general prosperity of your community.

Concrete roads outlast all other kinds of roads and require practically no repairs for many years. They are safe, clean, permanent and passable every day in the year.

JEWELLERY WORTH $200.

Was Stolen from Home of Wm. Pinkney at Cooksville.

The residence of Wm. Pinkney at Cooksville was broken into by unknown burglars during the absence of the family at church Sunday night, and several hundred dollars' worth of valuable jewellery stolen. Entrance was obtained through the conservatory window by sweeping the flower pots to one side. The house was thoroughly ransacked, every drawer being dumped on the floor. A lady's gold watch and chain, two rings, one a wedding ring and the other a valuable diamond one, and two five dollar gold pieces, besides several dollars in loose change, were discovered missing. Constable Rutledge, who was on the job yesterday, reports that he has a clue to the identity of the robbers. A negro and another suspicious looking tramp were seen loitering around Sunday afternoon, have not been heard of since, but their arrest may follow at any moment.

John Spencer, the negro who was seen with some companions in the vicinity, appeared before Magistrate Shaver yesterday. Two charges were laid against him, one of stealing, to which he pleaded not guilty, and one of vagraney, to which he pleaded guilty. When arrested he was begging food from some of the trainmen at the station. He was remanded for a week on both charges, having said that he could identify the robbers if he saw them again. In the meantime he is in Brampton jail. Constable Rutledge made inquiries at the pawn shops in the city, but none of the missing jewellery had yet been turned in.—Brampton Conservator.

SANITATION DECALOGUE.

Ten Pertinent Precepts Conducive to a Good Appearance and to Good Health.

1. Remember thy garbage can to keep it covered, lest thy garbage become a stench in the nostrils of the people, and breed flies.
2. Thou shalt cut the weeds in thy vacant lot lest it become a hiding place for old tin cans, which catch water and breed mosquitoes, papers and divers sort of trash.
3. Thou shalt bear false witness against thy neighbor's rubbish heap, likewise his dirty back yard.
4. Thou shalt clean out the habitation of thy horses and thy cow frequently lest the stable fly flourisheth and spread infantile paralysis and the house fly breed by the thousands and millions and annoy thee and thy beasts and produce much sickness in thy family.
5. Thou shalt prevent the breeding of the fly in the spring time that thy children unto the third and fourth generation need not swat him later.
6. Remember thy back yard and ally to keep them clean. Six days shalt thou labor and keep thy premises clean, and if yet the task is not accomplished thou couldst do worse than continue on the seventh.
7. Thou shalt covet all the air and sunshine thou canst obtain.
8. Look not upon the milk when it cometh from an unclean dairy for less if thy infant sickeneth and die.
9. Remember thy cleaning up day and keep it wholly
10. If thou dost harken unto these sayings and do them thou shalt live long in the land.

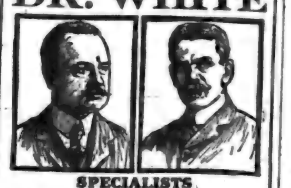
KEPHALDOL

CURES PAIN, BUT DOES NOT AFFECT THE HEART

First of all it may be well to mention that "Kephaldol" is the prescription of one of the world's greatest nerve specialists—the famous Herr Doctor Stohr, of Vienna, Austria.

He has used "Kephaldol" in his private practice and hospital clinics, in thousands of cases of Headaches, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Neuritis, La Grippe and other forms of Nerve Exhaustion.

The mere fact that Dr. Stohr originated "Kephaldol" is the only recommendation needed by most physicians and surgeons to commend the formula to their attention.



"Kephaldol" is the only pain-relieving remedy used by Dr. Stohr, because it is the only one that does not affect the heart or other organs and may be taken with perfect safety until a complete cure results.

"Kephaldol" Tablets may be obtained at most drug stores in 50c tubes, or they will be sent on receipt of price by Kephaldol Limited, 31 Latour St., Montreal.

AN ELOQUENT PASSAGE.

Probably of all the beautiful and eloquent passages ever written by the inimitable George D. Prentice, the following is the finest:

"It cannot be that earth is man's only abiding place. It cannot be that our life is a bubble cast by eternity to float alope upon its waves and sink into nothingness. Else why is it that the high and glorious aspirations that leap like angels from the temple of our hearts are forever wandering unsatisfied? Why is it that the rainbow and cloud come over us with a beauty that is not of earth and then pass off to leave us to muse on their loveliness? Why is it that the stars which 'hold their festival around the midnight throne' are set above the grasp of our limited faculties, forever mocking us with their unapproachable glory? And, finally, why is it that bright forms of human beauty are presented to our view and taken from us, leaving the thousand streams of our affection to flow back in an Alpine torrent upon our hearts? There is a realm where the rainbow never fades, where the sun will spread out before us like the islands that slumber on the ocean, and where the beautiful beings which pass before us like shadows will stay forever in our presence."

A BETTER REMEDY THAN NASTY SALTS

Few people like to take physic, especially salts, because they are so disagreeable to take and because of the griping and pains they cause. Rexall Orderlies enable you to take less physic, and all without griping, purging or excessive looseness. Salts and harsh physics usually give only temporary relief and often leave the bowels worse off than before.

Rexall Orderlies move the bowels promptly, and soothe, tone and strengthen the intestinal muscles, leaving them healthy and regular in action. They taste like candy, and the movement they cause is as easy and natural as though your bowels were in perfect health and you never had to take any physic at all. We have so much faith in Rexall Orderlies that we urge you to try them with the understanding that, if they do not satisfy you in every way, all you have to do to get your money back is to tell us. We honestly believe them to be the best bowel remedy made. In vest pocket tin boxes: 10c, 25c, 50c.

SHOULD HAVE GLUED IT.

A new minister was complaining of the very small collection of the previous Sunday, whereupon one of the elders remarked that the previous minister had always put a shilling or two in the plate, "to gie them a guid start," adding that he took the shillings back again after service.

So next Sunday the new minister placed a shining half-crown in the plate. What was his astonishment, however to find later that the collection was lower than ever, and, worse still his half-crown was gone.

Sorrowfully he confided his loss to the elder.

"Aye, mon," cried that worthy, "ye've no knowledge of the world! Ye should ha' glued the money to the plate, as the auld meenister did!"

A FATAL ACCIDENT.

A fatal accident occurred on John Large's farm, seven lots north of Shelburne, on Wednesday of last week. John Exelby, son of Robt. Exelby, one of the old residents of Melancthon, was in the employ of Mr. Large on the farm. A cow had come into a narrow alleyway leading to the granary and Mr. Exelby went in to put the animal out. By some means he was so badly crushed by the cow that he died the next day. The funeral was held on Friday to Hornings Mills cemetery. He is survived by his widow but no family.—Free Press.

CHEERING.

A Methodist minister was leaving his church and, at the close of his farewell sermon, he went round bidding his friends adieu. Presently he came to an old lady who seemed quite disconsolate over his departure, and was weeping bitterly.

"Never mind, mother," he said kindly, "if they take me away they will send one better to take my place."

"Ah," sobbed the dear old soul, "they said that last time, but they never did."

"Is this a fair sample of the dinner?" Anna asked, who had the healthy appetite of a strong young woman.

"It is, if anything, a little above the average," Brendon admitted.

Anna said nothing. The young man opposite was straining his ears to listen to their conversation. Mrs. White caught her eye, and smiled benignly down the table.

"I hope that Mr. Courtlaw is looking after you, Miss Pellissier," she said.

"Admirably, thank you," Anna answered.

The young lady with frizzled hair, whom Brendon had pointed out to her as Miss Ellicot, leaned forward from her hostess's side. She had very frizzy hair indeed, very black eyebrows, a profusion of metallic adornments about her neck and waist, and an engaging smile.

"We are so interested to hear, Miss Pellissier," she said, "that you have been living in Paris. We shall expect you to tell us all what to wear."

Anna smiled very faintly, and shook her head.

"I have come from a very unfashionable quarter," she said, "and I do not think that I have been inside a milliner's shop for a year. Besides, it is all reversed now, you know. Paris copies London."

Brendon leaned over confidentially.

"You are in luck, Miss Pellissier," he declared. "Your success is here absolutely meteoric. Miss Ellicot has spoken to you, the great Mr. Bullding is going to. For five minutes he has been trying to think of something to say. I am not sure, but I believe that he has just thought of something."

"May I be prepared?" Anna asked. "Which is Mr. Bullding?"

"Stout old gentleman four places down on the left. Look out, it's coming."

Anna raised her eyes, and caught the earnest gaze of an elderly gentleman with a double chin, a protuberant under lip, and a snuff-stained coat.

"I was in Paris four years ago," Mr. Bullding announced solemnly. "It rained the whole of the time, but we saw all the sights, and the place never seemed dull."

"It takes a great deal of bad weather to depress the true Parisian," Anna admitted.

"A volatile temperament—yes, a volatile temperament," Mr. Bullding repeated, rather struck with the phrase. "It is a pity that as nations we are not more friendly."

Anna nodded and turned again to Courtlaw.

"I will not be drawn into conversation with Mr. Bullding," she declared. "I believe that he would bore me. Tell me, what are these bananas and nuts for?"

"Dessert."

Anna laid down her serviette.

"Let us escape," she said. "Couldn't we three go out and have some coffee somewhere? The thought of that drawing room paralyses me."

Brendon laughed softly.

"We can," he said, "and we will. But it is only fair to warn you that it isn't expected. Mrs. White is proud of her drawing room evenings. There is a musical programme, and we have the windows open and the blinds up, and a pink lamp shade over the piano lamp—a sort of advertisement of the place, you know. Strangers look in and long, and neighbors are moved to envy."

Anna hesitated no longer. She almost sprang to her feet. Conscious of Mrs. White's surprise as she swung easily down the room, followed by the two men, she smiled a careless explanation at her.

"I am dying to renew my acquaintance with London, Mrs. White," she remarked.

"You are not going out—this evening, I trust," that lady asked, a trifle dismayed.

Anna did not pause, but she looked over her shoulder with slightly lifted eyebrows.

"Why not? They tell me that London is impossible till after ten, and I want my first impressions to be favorable."

"There will be some coffee and music in the drawing room in a few minutes," Mrs. White said.

"Thanks I'm not very fond of coffee," Anna answered, "and I hate music. Good night."

Mrs. White gasped, and then stiffened. Miss Ellicot, who sang ballads, and liked Brendon to turn over the pages for her, tossed her head. Anna passed serenely out.

CHAPTER IX.

Some Confidences and a Supper.

They found their way to a music hall. Seated high up near the ceiling—she had insisted upon cheap places—Anna, whose appetite for fresh things was as the appetite of a child, infected her two escorts with of her own gaity. Even on that night she saw many things which moved her to wonder.

"Will you tell me," she exclaimed leaning forward and touching Brendon upon the arm. "Why do not the people laugh? They have finished their day's work—this is their relaxation. Why do they not talk to one another and be happy? Look along this row, and that, and that," she exclaimed, motioning with her hand. "Is it a matter of conscience or digestion, or what?"

"Sadly! What a hideous philosophy. We shall become a nation of dyspeptics. How can an artist sing or dance to such a wooden wall? Ah!"

Her eyes twinkled with fun. She was leaning over and looking into the stalls. Sir John, white gloved white waistcoated, curled and 'debonnair' was whispering into Annabel's ear, whilst Miss Pellissier on the next seat affected to be absorbed in her programme.

"Oh, this is funny," Anna murmured. "I am so glad we came here."

"Do tell us the joke," Sydney Courtlaw begged.

She shook her head regretfully.

"It is too bad," she declared. "I cannot! But you must tell me this. Is it supposed in this dear, hypocritical old city to be quite respectable to be in the two shilling places at the Empire?"

Brendon smiled.

"I am not sure," he said, "that this is not the most respectable part in the house. Certainly we could give points to the stalls."

Anna sighed. She seemed disappointed.

"All the same," she murmured to herself, "I wish that Sir John could see us."

Afterwards she insisted upon supper, and on being hostess.

"Somewhere ridiculously cheap," "Somewhere where there are a great many people to be seen."

They took her to Frascati's, protesting firmly all the way against being her guests. But she was firm.

"After to-night," she declared, "we will share up. It is the only possible way, if you will bring me out with you sometimes. But to-night—no. I must be hostess. I have the whim or it. Mrs. White has started all the quicksilver in me, somehow. What a dinner—and what people!"

"You will never stay there," they both declared, in despair.

"Oh, I am not so sure," she answered cheerfully. "One can amuse oneself anywhere, and if you two are nice to me—who knows? I am enjoying this evening immensely, but if I do not hear one real laugh at supper-time I shall have hysterics. What do they do with their spirits, these people? Do they bottle them up? They talk—their lips seem to be moving always, but their faces are dead."

Wherever they went Anna attracted attention. Her unusual beauty, the distinction of her quiet clothes and elegant carriage, the Madonna-like calm of her features, broken up every now and then by the restless fire of her lips and eyes, seemed to turn people's heads towards her in the street, the theatre and the restaurant. And withal she was possessed of the most sublime unconsciousness. She seemed positively ignorant of the fact that she was in any way distinguished from the crowd. But when they were seated in the restaurant she certainly gazed about her with something akin to wonder.

"But what manner of people are these?" she asked. "Where do they come from? Have they been dug out of the country places? Are they really Londoners?"

"Nine-tenths of them," Brendon answered. "Perhaps more. But you must remember that this is a cheap place."

"Of course. It is what I wanted. I wanted to see the small shopkeeper and his wife, the working girls and their beaux—the lower middle classes."

"They are here," Brendon answered. "You can pick them out easily enough. They are jumbled up with the flotsam from the streets, and they probably feel for an hour or two that they are leading terrible lives."

"And the artists?" Anna asked. "Where do they go to? Where is their quarter."

Brendon laughed.

"I think," he said, "that our artists are like our soldiers—they lose the the signs of their calling, and come out always in mufti. You find the successful ones at the smart restaurants, the mediocre ones at the artists' clubs, and the failures on the streets. They are not to be distinguished as in Paris. They form no society of their own. They take their place in the great world according to their social standing, and like all other Englishmen they aim in their clothing and speech and deportment at the great Negative manner."

"Which means," Sydney remarked, "the deletion of all individuality. It is good for the hairdresser."

"Dear me," Anna murmured. "What a lot I am learning about my countrypeople! Now tell me, please, if I am not too inquisitive. What do you two boys do? You work, I suppose."

"Thank you, Miss Pellissier," Brendon remarked. "It is a good many years since I have been called a boy. I am a clerk in a bank, if you know what that is."

"I can guess," Anna answered. "I suppose it is very interesting. It sounds, a little——"

"It not only sounds, but it is," Brendon interrupted, "a deadly grind."

"And Sydney?"

"I sit at the next desk," Sydney answered. "Only of course I'm Brendon's junior by a good bit. I wanted to be an artist like David, but I came to grief."

"So did I," Anna declared. "Your brother knocked all that out of me."

Sydney was moredulous.

"David doesn't often make mistakes," he said, "but——"

"He made no mistake about me," Anna declared. "I do not believe that I have even the temperament of an artist. I shall always be thankful to him for being—well—brutally frank with me. It is such a waste of time, isn't it, hammering away at something which is not one's 'metier'."

Brendon sighed.

"There are very many of us," he said, "who have all our lives to be doing that sort of thing."

"If one knows it," Anna said, "there is always a means of escape."

"Some of us," Brendon answered drily, "have our livings to earn."

Anna laughed, and laughed again to herself softly. How about herself? She had barely sufficient money in her purse—in the world—to keep her for a week. Yet her face was bravely enough set towards the future. Its very difficulties were an inspiration.

"I really do not see," she said, "why one should not be able to earn one's living in a pleasant way."

"The pleasantest things in the world," Brendon answered, "become drudgery when one has to do them."

"That is all very well," Anna declared, "but surely the things which appeal most to one are the things one is likely to do best."

"It is an admirable theory," Brendon said slowly. "The pity of it is that it so seldom works out in actual life."

"Theories won't work themselves out," Anna declared lightly. "If we don't make them prove themselves, the fault is often our own, isn't it? Please ask for the bill, Sydney. I really can't call you Mr. Courtlaw, you know, after having called your brother that for so long. This place is garish. It makes my eyes and my head ache."

They passed out into the cool streets. Anna drew a little sigh of relief.

"Ah, this is better," she exclaimed. "Don't let us hurry home. I want to look about me. Streets, streets, streets! Is there no green anywhere to rest one's eyes?"

They took her into Piccadilly and walked slowly along under the trees of the Green Park. She plied them with numberless questions. There were so many phases of life which were strange to her, so much that she wanted to understand. But in the middle of an animated conversation she suddenly stopped short upon the pavement.

They were under the portico of a celebrated restaurant, from which the people were just emerging after supper. A tall commissionaire was standing by the door of a small handsome brougham. Sir John, with Annabel and her aunt in close attendance, were crossing the pavement. It chanced that Annabel turned her head, and for a moment the eyes of the two sisters met. Sir John also looked around, and seeing Anna, frowned severely. He bent low and whispered something in his companion's ear. She nodded and suffered herself to be handed into the carriage.

Both Brendon and Sydney Courtlaw plunged instantly into some alien subject of conversation. But Anna's low laugh, although not altogether mirthful, brushed away the moment of embarrassment.

"You see," she said, "I am a very black sheep indeed. My own people will have nothing to do with me."

"It was your sister, of course?" Sydney remarked softly. "What a marvellous likeness!"

"Yes, it was my sister," Anna answered. "I suppose we are very much alike."

The carriage vanished round a corner. Something which looked like a white handkerchief fluttered from the window. For a few moments Anna remained silent. Her high spirits flagged. They walked aimlessly along, the two men glancing furtively at one another. Then with a little exclamation she recovered herself.

"Dear me, how absurd!" she exclaimed. "As if London were not large enough for both of us. Please tell me, Mr. Brendon, ought we to be out so late as this? Will Mrs. White give me notice?"

"We have latchkeys," they both assured her.

She smiled.

"Capital! Don't hurry then. I like to look around me."

So they threaded their way through the loitering groups of men and women. Anna frequently paused to look about her, often perplexed, more than once astonished.

"I do not understand these people at all," she declared. "There are none who seem really to be enjoying themselves, except those who have had too much to drink. All these others, they come from their evening's pleasure as though from hours of labour."

"The Londoner and the Parisian are as far apart as the poles," Sydney reminded her. "The Parisian hums a gay tune as he walks homewards and thinks over his evening's entertainment. The Englishman wonders how he will sleep, thinks of the morrow's work, and reckons up how much his evening's pleasure has cost him."

Anna shrugged her shoulders.

"MY ONLY MEDICINE"

Says Mrs. Corbett, Are "Fruit-a-tives" "They Keep Me In Perfect Health"

MRS. ANNIE A. CORBETT

AVON, ONT., May 14th, 1913

"I have used "Fruit-a-tives" for Indigestion and Constipation with most excellent results, and they continue to be my only medicine. I am highly pleased with "Fruit-a-tives" and am not ashamed to have the facts published to the world. When I first started, about six years ago, to use them, I took four for a dose, but I cured myself of the above troubles and gradually reduced the dose to one tablet at night.

Before taking "Fruit-a-tives" I took salts and other pills but the treatment was too harsh. I thought I might as well suffer from the disease as from these treatments.

Finally, I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised with a letter in which someone recommended them very highly, so I tried them. The results were more than satisfactory and I have no hesitation in recommending them to any other person. They have done me a world of good. I get satisfaction from them, and that is quite a lot". TAILOR SHOP GUTTED Inmates Had Difficulty Making Their Escape from Burning Building.

About three o'clock on Sunday morning fire broke out in the tailoring establishment of Chas. Drinkwater in Brampton. The alarm was sounded, but the fire had made good headway before being discovered. When aroused, Mr. and Mrs. Drinkwater and baby were forced to make their escape from the building, in the upper part of which they resided, in their night clothes. They climbed over the roofs of the adjoining buildings until they reached the Graham House, the hotel situated further down the street, and were assisted in, climbing through the windows.

Mr. Drinkwater had been in business for about two years and had just placed in stock $900 worth of cloth, on which there was no insurance. He owned the building, a portion of which was occupied by A. E. McCollum as a photographic studio, which was also gutted. F. A. Williams shoe store, adjoining, suffered greatly, his stock being badly damaged with smoke and water and the building made untenable. His loss is covered by insurance. Mr. Drinkwater had $700 insurance on his furniture, which is almost a total loss, and $2000 on the building, which was damaged to more than that extent. It is supposed that the fire started from an electric iron used on the Saturday night and from which the current had not been turned off.

Irvine-Myers.

St. James' Square Presbyterian Church welcomed a small wedding party on Saturday, when Rev. Dr. Robertson married Miss Muriel Dalziel, elder daughter of the late Elgin Myers, K.C., to Charles Cecil Irvine, Dr. Davies playing the wedding marches. The bride wore her travelling suit of navy blue with a smart black hat, trimmed with blue and tango roses. There were no attendants, and Mr. and Mrs. Irvine left directly after the service for the train, going first to Detroit. From there they will go on to Chicago and New Orleans and return by boat to New York. They will come back to town later and will spend the summer at 13 Binscarth road. Among those at the wedding were : Mr. and Mrs. T. O. Cowper, of Welland, the bride's uncle and aunt ; Miss Marion Myers, her sister (who wore a suit of navy blue and smart green and black hat); Miss Louise Irvine, of Buffalo, the groom's sister ; Miss Constance Keys, of Montreal ; Miss Stella Campbell, Orangeville; Mrs. Young, Gravenhurst; Miss Kate McFayden and Miss Jeffrey, of Buffalo.—Tuesday's Globe.

Absolute Prohibition.

Absolute prohibition will prevail in the United States navy after July1 next. Secretary Daniels made public an order which not only will abolish the traditional "wine mess" of the officers, but will bar all alcoholic liquors from every ship and shore station of the navy.

This order, constituting one of the most notable victories ever won by the prohibition forces, was issued upon the recommendation of Surgeon General Braisted. It follows :

"The use or introduction for drinking purposes of alcoholic liquors on board any naval vessel or within any naval yard or station is prohibited and commanding officers will be held directly responsible for the enforcement of this order."

BANISH PIMPLES AND ERUPTIONS

In the Spring Most People Need a Tonic Medicine.

One of the surest signs that the blood is out of order is the pimples, unsightly eruptions and eczema that come frequently with the change from winter to spring. These prove that the long indoor life of winter has had its effect upon the blood, and that a tonic medicine is needed to put it right. Indeed there are few people who do not need a tonic at this season. Bad blood does not merely show itself in disfiguring eruptions. To this same condition is due attacks of rheumatism and lumbago ; the sharp stabbing pains of sciatica and neuralgia ; poor appetite and a desire to avoid exertion. You cannot cure these troubles by the use of purgative medicines—you need a tonic, and a tonic only, and among all medicines there is none can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for their tonic, life-giving, nerve-restoring powers. Every dose of this medicine makes new, rich blood which drives out impurities, stimulates every organ and brings a feeling of new health and energy to weak, tired, ailing men, women and children. If you are out of sorts give this medicine a trial and see how quickly it will restore the appetite, revive drooping spirits, and fill your veins with new, health-giving blood.

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

AGRICULTURAL AWAKENING.

There are signs of an agricultural awakening in the provinces down by the sea. This awakening is not confined to one or two districts. In some cases whole provinces are being awakened. Prince Edward Island has achieved notoriety in recent years through the development of the black fox industry. But there are signs of development on the Island that are of greater significance than that of raising foxes. Farmers there are waking up to the fact that there are possibilities in agriculture never dreamed of. The co-operative spirit is abroad on the Island and promises to effect a marked change in its agricultural production. Farmers on the Island have been a pretty conservative class. They have been content to work along in their own way and while not making a heap, have been able to lay by a little each year and have thus attained a position of comparative security, so far as their living and that of their families has been concerned. There are, however, marked signs of a change and farmers are learning that their surplus funds can be utilized to better advantage than that afforded by the savings bank and 3 per cent. interest. The development of the fox industry is perhaps responsible. The people have seen fortunes made in a day by judicious investment in fox ranching. This has created the belief that money is for another purpose than hoarding in a savings bank, and consequently farmers are beginning to do things agriculturally with a view to increasing production and making their surplus funds return more than the paltry 3 cents on the dollar. While a great deal of these funds has been invested in ranches and will continue to be so invested for a few years at least, a large share is going into agricultural development. One of the recent movements is the development of co-operative egg circles. Fruit growing and dairying have been receiving attention for some time.—Canadian Farmer.

A Real Nerve and Body-Building Medicine

We believe Rexall Olive Oil Emulsion is the best remedy made for toning the nerves, enriching the blood, building up wasted tissues, renewing health, strength and energy—the best medicine you can use if you are run-down, tired-out, nervous and debilitated, no matter what the cause. It doesn't depend for its good effect upon alcohol or habit forming drugs, because it contains none. It may not make you feel better in a few hours, but it will make you feel better, we are sure, just as soon as the tonic and food properties it contains have a chance to get into the blood and, through the blood, into the nerves of the system. Pure Olive Oil and the Hypophosphites have long been endorsed by successful physicians, but here, for the first time, they are combined into one preparation which, as a nerve-food and a builder of strength and health, we believe, has no equal.

If you don't feel well, begin taking Rexall Olive Oil Emulsion to-day, and build your health and strengthen your system against more serious illness. To convalescent, old people, puny children and all others who are weak, run-down or ailing, we offer Rexall Olive Oil Emulsion with our personal promise that if it doesn't make you well and strong again, it have the utmost faith in it, we would not sell it with this guarantee, nor wouldn't it with this guarantee, nor even recommend it as we do. We are sure that once you have used it you will recommend it to your friends, and thank us for having recommended it to you. Interesting Papers Discovered in Home of the late Goldwin Smith

An interesting find has been made at the "Grange," the home of the Art Museum of Toronto, and the former home of the late Goldwin Smith and, before him of the Boulton family. This interesting old building may be found between Beverley and McCaul streets facing Grange avenue.

The directors of the museum have been figuring on wiring the upper portion of the house for electric light ; a simple thing in itself, but a dainty piece of work if the quaintness of the Grange is not to be diminished by modern appliances.

Several schemes were broached, and in connection with one of these Mr. C. Johnstone, one of the museum staff, took a little stroll about the upper part of the house endeavoring to construct a scheme to overcome the difficulties. The most suitable partitions and sections of the floor to be opened for the wires were uppermost in his mind.

What is This ?

He determined that the best method, in his estimation, was to run the covered metal strands up behind a thick partition and accordingly made a small opening to investigate the dark regions of the interior. There was no thought of treasure or rare documents mingled with his research, but before his hand and his bared arm could study the inside condition, he came upon something soft and crackly.

Rats? No, the object is inanimate. They are papers. There are a great number of them. Are they bank notes ?

He clutches as many as his hand can hold and brings the buried treasure out into the light. Amongst a pile of hand-written papers and documents he notices a few paper covered books, and the first to greet him is an old magazine with the date of 1794 upon its cover.

More Treasure.

The hunt continues. Another magazine of five years later comes into view. Ancient orders to the head clerk of the Boulton general store, are discovered. Then follows another book upon which some unknown has transcribed his thoughts, impressions and ideas arising from the discourses he heard in early York. But this book has one page of brilliant interest.

This is a pen and ink sketch thought to be the old courthouse and jail on King street east, between Toronto street and Church street, and in the rear of the present Toronto Railway Chambers and the mercantile establishments to the immediate west. The drawing, though perhaps a little crude, appears to be wrought with infinite pains. It shows the spire of a former St. James Church rising in the near background and the guard houses and other outbuildings of the seat of justice.

The Shop Orders.

The orders for the household stores are addressed in every instance but one to Mr. Proudfoot. The exception is written to D'Arcy Boulton, who kept a famous general store at the southwest corner of Frederick and King streets, about one hundred years ago. Mr. Proudfoot is thought to be the chief clerk. The four corners of this intersection were the business centre of the town, and the great quantity and variety of the orders would lead one to believe that money was very scarce in those old days. But dollars and shillings are used, although the sterling currency was the standard for Canada.

The orders do not specify details in every case, but in one order Mr. Proudfoot is requested to turn over three dollars' worth of salt to Mrs. Sheeker at the request of her lord and master.

Very Curious.

The order that is made out to Mr. Boulton is curious in the extreme, and proves that the title which now graces this city was in use long before it was established by law. From the founding of the town (1793) to the year 1834, the law looked upon this place as York, but the order to Mr. Boulton is dated November 13th, 1819, and marked Toronto. All other documents, notes and papers bear the name of York.

But we are not left in the dark as to the things which our early Torontonians delved in, for there amongst the find was the "waste" book of Wm. Boulton, York, January, 1828. This peculiar title refers to a balance sheet and sets out the worldly estate of the gentleman in question. In the outset he writes : "An inventory of the money, goods and debts due to or by me, W. Boulton."

From these musty pages we learn that tea sold for twelve shillings a pound in York in those days, and that the populace must have entertained doubts as to the purity of the drinking water. One is down for fifty dollars worth of rum, and another is on the books for the same amount of red wine. Many others are down for smaller amounts of the fiery liquid.

"House and shop and servants' wages, which, together with housekeeping expenses till midsummer, amount to £130," is an item which shows that the expense of keeping up a large domestic establishment and the operation of a general store, would consume about one hundred dollars a month then.

This Mr. W. Boulton most likely was interested in a ship which plied to and from the West Indies. Several items appear regarding the ship "Endeavor," and the rum and cotton that have been brought to York in its holds. "Ship Endeavor gained as my share £56-13-2," is one of the items regarding this vessel.

The Warrant.

Possibly the most interesting paper amongst the find is a warrant issued by Mr. D. Boulton, 13 July, 1828. It reads :—

Home District,
Markham Township.

Mr. Richard Sylvester, of the Township of Markham, yeoman, personally appeared before me, D'Arcy Boulton, the younger one of His Majesty's Justice of the Peace in and for the said district ; who saith that on Friday evening, it being the eleventh day of July instant, one Alfred Reynolds, laborer, and one Thomas Robinson of the same township, yeoman, came to the house of this informant, and the said Alfred Reynolds in a riotous and violent manner did break open the door of the informant's house and struck at him several times, using abusive language against himself and others, and threatened him and struck at one Dennis Wilson. Deponent therefore considers his life in danger. He therefore prays security of the peace.

Sworn before me the 13 July, 1828.
D. Boulton, Jr., J.P.
Richard Sylvester.

It would be interesting to know the fate of these riotous and violent persons when they appeared before Mr. Boulton, but the books are silent on the point.

About Methodists.

In those days the Church of England was looked upon by its members, as far above any of the other sects which were springing into being. A little eight page booklet, printed by James Lane, Montreal, 1820, gives an inkling of the scorn of the English Church toward the Methodists in those bygone days.

"Remarks on the popular Christianity of the present day as it is propagated by the people called Methodists," is the thrilling title of the work, and the text is taken from 1st John 4 : 1. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, etc., etc." The writer, who does not sign his sermon, proves to his own satisfaction that this type of Christianity is a perverted gospel, but it is also to the credit of the Grange and its former owners that the little booklet was not read, for the writer had to cut the pages with his knife.

An Ancient Blue Book.

There is also an ancient blue book being the "Cases Argued and Determined in the Court of the King's Bench at York, Upper Canada, in the Fifth Year of the Reign of George VI."

The names of the judges adorn the cover ; they are :—

The Hon. W. D. Powell, Chief Justice.
The Hon. Wm. Campbell.
The Hon. D'Arcy Boulton.

The book was printed here in 1825 by a John Carey.

Magazine of 1799.

The magazine that was printed in 1799 was an agricultural paper, bearing the title of "The Commercial and Agricultural Magazine"; it is No. 1 and Vol. 1. Its opening story is headed "On the possibility of communication in books, agricultural information that may be useful to the productive farmer." There is also a list giving "The price of coal in London in August, 1799," where the sums asked for vary between forty-two and forty-seven shillings a ton —$10.50 to $11.75.

Mr. Johnstone is of the opinion that the papers have been swept into a corner and then a partition built up from the floor, for he has discovered many irregularities about the upper part, which lead him to think that the Grange was built in pieces after it was started by Mr. Boulton in 1817.—Evening Telegram.

BEST MONEY HE HAS EVER SPENT

Was What C. Hansen Paid for Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Had been Ailing for Six or Seven Years when He Took a Neighbor's Advice and Found a Complete Cure.

Mona, Man. April 27th. (Special)—Mr. Cornelius Hansen, well known and highly respected here, is telling his friends of his simple but complete cure from a protracted illness. The facts in brief are : He had Kidney Disease : he took Dodd's Kidney Pills ; they cured him. But let Mr. Hansen tell his own story.

"I was troubled with my Kidneys for six or seven years," he says. "My back was so sore I couldn't get out of bed in the mornings. I met a neighbor, and he advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. He said he had used them in his family for a long time and they were a great medicine.

"I bought six boxes of them, and by the time I had taken three of them I was feeling much better. Now I am quite well, and I think the best money I ever spent in my life was what I paid for Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are no cure-all. They simply cure sick Kidneys. But they do all that is claimed for them.

A Tennessee mountaineer, not in the 'moonshine' belt, went to town, and among other things he bought a jug of whisky. Not wanting to carry it about with him, he decided to leave it at a grocery store for a while.

In order that the jug might be properly identified, he took a deck of cards from his pocket, extracted the five of hearts, wrote his name upon it, and attached it to the handle of the jug.

Two hours later the mountaineer returned. The jug was gone !

"Look here, Jim," he cried to the proprietor of the store, "do you know what became of thet jug o' mine?"

"Sure," rejoined the proprietor, "Jake Harwell came along with the six of hearts and took it."

Lecture on Ceylon.

Rev. G. W. Tebbs, rector of St. Mark's, gave his illustrated lecture on Ceylon at the meeting of St. Andrew's Young People's Society on Monday night. Mr. Tebbs spent some years in mission work in Ceylon and was therefore in a position to give first-hand information on his subject. His remarks on the position of the island, its luxuriant vegetation, its natural beauty, the climate, the customs of the people, their superstitious religious beliefs and practices and the progress of Christian missions were highly instructive and were followed with keen interest. The views, which were prepared from photos taken by Mr. Tebbs while living on the island, were very interesting and served to impress the subject matter of the lecture on the minds of the audience. Mr. Tebbs is a facile speaker with a keen sense of humor and his address was thoroughly enjoyed by all who had the good fortune to hear him.

St. Mark's Musicale

A large and appreciative audience attended the Sacred Musicale, which was given in St. Mark's Church on Friday night last under the joint auspices of the Church choir and orchestra. Both organizations were at their best and their rendition of the different numbers in which they appeared was the subject of highly favorable comment. The programme opened with the hymn "He is Risen" and was brought to a close with the vesper hymn "Now the Day is Over." The full choir numbers were "Christ Our Passover," "Sing Alleluiah Forth," the hymn "King of Kings and Lord of Lords" and "The Risen Lord." The orchestra, which has reached a high state of efficiency under the capable direction of Mr. E. H. Smith, contributed two numbers "Calvary" and "The Guardian Angel." Miss Clara Hulse's violin solos were brilliantly played and were, as usual, greatly appreciated. Mrs. Meek, Miss B. Lewis and Mr. T. Huston charmed everybody with their vocal solos, and Mr. G. W. Luxton's cornet solo was a skilful interpretation of a difficult number. The Misses Shaw were heard with pleasure in their pianoforte duet "Alpine Storm" and Miss M. Leighton showed clever technic and considerable interpretative ability in her piano solo "Rondo Capriccioso." Another appreciated number was a quartette "Evening Prayer" by Mrs. Meek, Misses Darraugh, Cruikshank and Shaw. A collection was taken near the close of the programme in aid of the Organ Fund.

Gillespie—Cannawin

Mr. Charles Gillespie, one of Orangeville's well-known young business men, and Miss Bertha Evelyn Cannawin, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Cannawin, were married at the home of the bride's parents on Zina Street at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. W. M. Morris, pastor of St. Andrew's Church, in the presence of a number of the immediate friends of the contracting parties. The bride, who was unattended, was given away by her father. She was dressed in white satin with shadow lace and wore a bridal veil caught up with lillies of the valley. Her sister, Miss Clara, played Mendelssohn's bridal chorus prior to the service. After receiving the congratulations and good wishes of the assembled friends after the marriage, the newly wedded couple led the way to the dining room, where a dainty repast was served. The bride, who is a most estimable young lady, received a large number of handsome wedding gifts. The groom's gift to the bride was a cheque for a handsome sum and a gold bracelet to the pianiste. Mr. and Mrs. Gillespie left on the evening train for a short honeymoon trip to Buffalo, Detroit and other points. On their return they will make their home on Broadway. Among the guests from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Wilson, Brampton, Mr. and Mrs. William Rowan and daughter, Lillian, Shelburne, and Mr. and Mrs. Wilkinson, Erin. IMMIGRANT ARRESTED.

Is Charged With Theft of His Employer's Gold Watch.

High Constable Marshall made a clever arrest on Monday afternoon, when he took into custody a young English immigrant, named Stanley Child. Child had been living with Geo. A. Mackenzie, a Mono farmer, who had employed him for the summer. Last Thursday Mackenzie, who lives near Elba, went to Shelburne to attend the Spring Horse Show. When he returned he found that Child, who is about 20 years of age, had taken his departure. He subsequently discovered that a gold watch and a rifle were missing and naturally concluded that Child was responsible for their disappearance. On Monday he notified Marshall of his loss and furnished him with a description of the suspected thief and the missing articles. With the aid of the telephone the Constable managed to get a clue to the direction Child had taken after leaving Mackenzie's and finally learned that a young man answering to the description furnished by Mackenzie had been noticed passing through Charleston. Requisitioning J. E. Smith & Co's. Ford runabout with Mr. J. Bagnell for chauffeur, Marshall set out for Charleston and was successful in apprehending the man he was after in the neighborhood of the village. Child was arrested at the home of a farmer, with whom he had been endeavoring to hire. The missing watch was found in his possession, but he told the officer that he had hidden the rifle. The accused was brought back to Orangeville and taken before P. M. Pattullo, who remanded him to the county jail until Saturday.

ASSURING YOUR BUSINESS

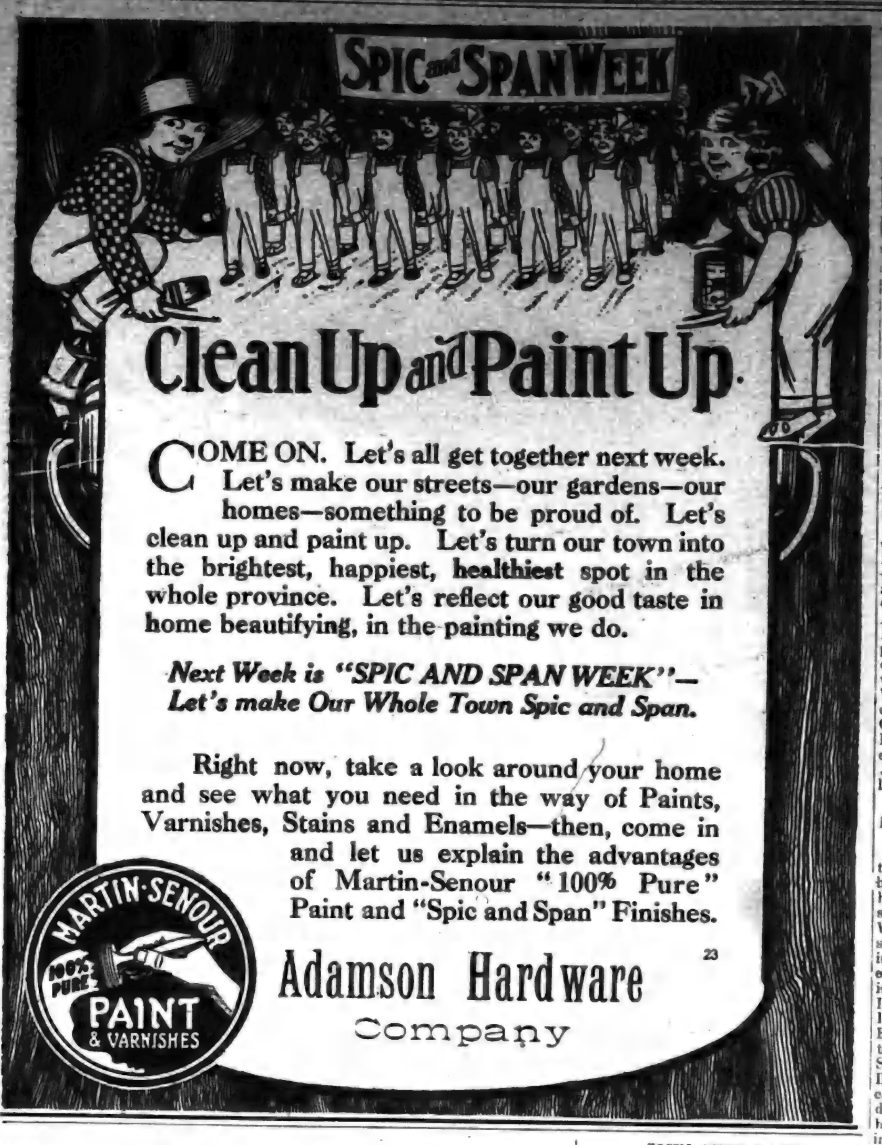
A policy of advertising is a policy of life assurance, and the protection thus secured is well worth its annual cost.

Old customers die or move away—they must be replaced.

Old customers are subject to the influence of temptation—they may be induced to divide their custom—to do some of their shopping at a competitor's.

New comers to this community will shop with you—become regular customers—if they are invited to do so.

Your competitor's advertising is an influence which must be offset if you are to maintain your trade.



Not to advertise regularly to the readers of THE BANNER is to leave your business unprotected.

A WORD TO THE PUBLIC

It is no sign of weakness to follow the lead of advertising. You owe it to yourself to get the most for your money, the best goods and the best service. And if you find that your inclination is to shop where you are invited to shop rather than continue to be a customer of the shop which never solicits your good-will, you need have no other compunctions of conscience.

JOHN GETS BACK.

She stood there and glared at him. "And you mean to stand there and ask me to press your trousers?" she demanded with all the sternness she could muster.

"Why, certainly, my dear," responded Mr. Stubb, affably; "is that asking too much!"

"Well, I should say it is, John Henry Stubb. I'd have you know that when you married me you did not marry a flat-iron."

That evening his turn came.

"John, dear," chirped Mrs. Stubb just after supper. "I wish you would do me a favor before you go. Button my waist up in the back, that's a good man."

But Mr. Stubb merely puffed his cigar and chuckled softly.

"Nay! Nay! Maria. I would have you know when you accepted me you did not say 'Yes' to a buttonhook."

MRS. W. C. HAND.

After an illness of six months' duration, previous to which she had been a remarkably healthy woman, Mrs. W. C. Hand, quietly expired on Monday evening. The end was not unexpected as those watching at her side realized for some days that she could not survive much longer. Mrs. Hand's death removes one of the pioneers of the town as she had resided here for forty years. She was a daughter of United Empire Loyalist stock and was born in the Niagara district in 1837. When she was seven years of age her father died and at seventeen she lost her mother. She came to live with an elder sister in Simcoe county and in 1858 was married to Mr. Hand who predeceased her by twenty-one years. Of the family to which she belonged she was the last survivor. Her father's name was Francis Humphries. She had a brother, also, named Francis, and four sisters. Mrs. Hand was a lifelong member of the Anglican church and for many years was an active member of its societies. Among the floral offerings were an anchor from St. Andrew's congregation and a cross from the W. A. of St. Andrew's church, besides others from friends and members of the family. Deceased leaves a family of one son and three daughters. They are Mr. Jas. F. Hand, of Essa, Mrs. G. McCluskey and Miss Mary Hand, Alliston, and Mrs. C. A. Beaupre, Lansing, Mich. The funeral took place this afternoon from the home of deceased, Wellington St. Service was conducted by Rev. B. N. de Foe Wagner in St. Andrew's Church, after which interment was made in the Cemetery. The pallbearers were Messrs. W. S. Ellis, T. J. Gallaugher, W. C. Henderson, R. Henderson, J. S. Allen and R. J. Wallace.—Alliston Herald.

EARLY DAYS ON LAKE SIMCOE.

Sixty-seven years is a long time to live in one place, but Bradford has a citizen who came to reside here in 1847, and has lived here ever since, says the Bradford Witness. Mr. Wm. Walker is the only surviving resident who was living at that time in Bradford. The Witness is indebted to Mr. Walker for the early and interesting history from Bradford to Little York, now Toronto. From Bradford a line of omnibusses or English coaches ran daily to Toronto. The passengers from the Lake Simcoe villages and towns, including Barrie, Orillia and Beaverton, were conveyed by boat to Bradford wharf daily. Captain Lawton owned the boats and lived at Holland Landing. The boats formerly went to the Holland Landing wharf, but the route was changed to Bradford. The traffic became so heavy as the country became settled that the rates increased. Miller & Playter, who owned the bus line, met with opposition, for there was a second company formed. "The People's Line" was started in conjunction with the other. Both of these lines were taxed to their utmost capacity. These old English coaches left Bradford wharf in the morning at six o'clock, and at 12 noon. They were painted white, and held from 15 to 20 passengers, part of whom were accommodated on the roof of the coach. Two span of horses to each coach ran under the crack of the whip to the first stopping place, Aurora, where fresh horses were waiting, then on to Richmond Hill, where another change was made, completing the journey in four hours. With the advent of the steam railway these lines soon quit business, and with them much interesting history of those early days, and Bradford ceased to be a divisional point. To-day hundreds of automobiles pass over the same route, and the romance of the days of the stage will ere long be entirely forgotten.

SIMPSON—McCLELLAND.

Grand Valley Methodist Church was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday afternoon, April 15th, at 1.30 o'clock, when Miss Florence McClelland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James McClelland, and Mr. Arthur N. Simpson, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Simpson, were united in marriage Rev. C. L. Poole officiating. Miss Pearl Simpson played the wedding march. The church was beautifully decorated with ferns, easter lilies and carnations. The bride, who was given away by her father, indeed looked lovely in her wedding gown of cream silk, with overdress of embroidered net, with pearl trimmings. Her veil of tulle was caught with orange blossoms. She carried a sheaf of roses and lily of the valley, and wore the groom's gift a beautiful pearl pendant, immediately after the ceremony, while the bridal party retired to sign the register, Miss Beatrice Rounding sang "Because." The ushers were W. R. Johnston, W. R. Hamilton, J. H. Donaghy and H. S. Courtney. Following the church service, Mr. and Mrs. McClelland, held a reception in their home on Amaranth street, where the happy couple received the congratulations of about sixty guests. After a daintily served wedding dinner, and the cutting of the wedding cake, toasts to the bride and to the host and hostess were proposed and promptly responded to. The many presents received bear splendid testimony to the popularity of the young couple. Amidst the good wishes and showers of rice and confetti Mr. and Mrs. Simpson left on the five o'clock train for a short honeymoon trip, the bride's travelling suit being of navy blue cloth and black hat.—Star & Vidette.

DEATH OF SAMUEL LINDSAY.

The sudden death of Samuel G. Lindsay, of Shelburne, at Expanse, Sask., on Friday, April 17th, was a great shock to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Lindsay, of William St. Deceased left here on March 24th with his brother-in-law, James Jelly, who was moving to his farm near Expanse, Sask. The deceased had spent the winter at his home here and before leaving for the West had a couple of bad attacks of bleeding from the nose, but nothing serious was anticipated. Deceased was 22 years of age, was a bright young fellow and well liked by his associates. He was only ill for about two days and a nurse was in attendance and he was given the best care possible. As there is no undertaker at Expanse his body had to be taken to Moose Jaw, a distance of 35 miles, to be embalmed and coffined. The remains arrived in Shelburne by the morning train on Tuesday, April 21st, in charge of his brother, John Lindsay, of Moose Jaw. He is survived by his parents, one brother, above mentioned, and five sisters, Mrs. Jas. Jelly, Shelburne; Mrs. W. J. Smith, Emerson, Man.; Mrs. Peterman, Moose Jaw; Miss Annie Lindsay, Toronto, and Miss Elinor Lindsay, at home. The funeral was held on Wednesday afternoon to Shelburne cemetery and was largely attended. The bereaved friends have the sympathy of all in their great trouble.—Free Press.

OUR HOME WOMEN HAVE BEAUTIFUL HAIR

Next time you go to the theatre or to the "movies" just notice, if you please, how many of our home ladies have beautiful hair—glossy, lustrous, and well-dressed. Then, if you will pick out five or ten of those whose hair seems to be particularly pretty and will ask them what they use on it, we feel sure that at least more than half of them will say "Harmony Hair Beautifier." It is fast becoming the rage with both men and women who are particular about the appearance of their hair.

Sprinkle a little Harmony Hair Beautifier on your hair each time before brushing it. Contains no oil; will not change color of hair, nor darken gray hair.

To keep hair and scalp dandruff-free and clean, use Harmony Shampoo. This pure liquid shampoo gives an instantaneous rich lather that immediately penetrates to every part of hair and scalp, insuring a quick, thorough cleansing. Washed off just as quickly, the entire operation takes only a few moments. Contains nothing that can harm the hair; leaves no harshness or stickiness—just a sweet cleanliness.

Both preparations come in odd-shaped, very ornamental bottles, with sprinkler tops. Harmony Hair Beautifier, $1.00. Harmony Shampoo, 50c. Both guaranteed to satisfy you in every way, or your money back. Sold only at the more than 7,000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only by us. T. F. & T. J. Brown, Druggists, Orangeville.

A LARGE FAMILY.

"Well, Rosie, what is it?" she finally asked, drawing the child to her.

"Please, teacher, we've got a new baby at our house."

"Oh, have you, Rosie? Isn't that fine? What's the baby's name?"

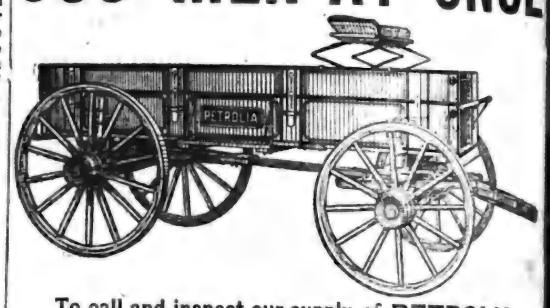
"Ikie."

Several days later the teacher remembered to inquire about the new arrival.

"Oh, Rosie, how is Ikie to-day?"

The child looked bewildered: "Oh, teacher, we ain't got no Ikie."

"Yes. You told me you had a baby."



A gleam of intelligence appeared on Rosie's face. "No, teacher, his name's Mose; his name ain't Ikie. We found we already got one Ikie."

CONFIDENCE.

Before the passage of the present strict banking laws in Wisconsin, starting a bank was a comparatively simple proposition. The surprisingly small amount of capital needed is well illustrated by the story told on himself, when asked how he happened to enter the banking business.

"Well," he said, "I didn't have much else to do, so I rented an empty store building and painted bank on the window. The first day I was open for business a man came in and deposited a hundred dollars with me. The second day another man dropped in and deposited two hundred and fifty; and so, by George along about the third day I got confidence enough in the bank to put in a hundred myself!"

NEW HOPE FOR SUFFERERS FROM PARALYSIS

There are cases of paralysis that cannot be cured. But that is far different from saying that every case of paralysis is incurable. There is absolute proof than many forms of this disease are curable. Of the cases that cannot be cured many can be so benefitted that the formerly hopeless sufferer will once more find life worth living.

Attention is called to the remarkable cures that have been effected in cases of partial paralysis, and other severe nervous disorders, by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Some of these cures are so wonderful as to challenge belief, but in every case the statements have been carefully verified and may be investigated by anyone interested. In this connection the case of Miss B. Milleban, of St. John, N.B., is worthy of the most careful attention. Miss Milleban says: "Some three years ago I was taken seriously ill with diphtheria. The doctor brought me through this dreaded trouble, and I was assumed to be well. But two weeks later I took a relapse, my throat and limbs becoming paralyzed. I could neither speak nor walk. I was under the best of medical care, and after a few weeks was able to sit up in bed, but my throat was still completely paralyzed and I could only utter unintelligible sounds. I was treated by three of St. John's best physicians, for this trouble and my case was given up as hopeless. A friend asked me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, but I had spent so much on medicine without help that I thought it would be only a further waste of money. However, I felt myself growing daily weaker and weaker, and I decided as a last chance that I would try the Pills. By the time I had taken a half dozen boxes I could walk across the floor, something doctors had told me could never happen again. I still continued taking the pills, my speech returned. My friends thought my restoration nothing short of a miracle, and I think myself that I have to thank Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that I am living to-day, and I feel confident they can do quite as much for others as they did for me."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills effect cures in cases of this kind because they make new, rich, red blood, which feeds and strengthens the nerves, and tones up the whole system. If you are in need of a medicine give these pills a trial. We are confident you will not be disappointed. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A WONDER WORKER.

"It heals like magic," is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

Mimico is the latest addition to the large number of Canadian towns and cities to get Carnegie libraries. It is to get $5,700 and plans and specifications for a building costing that amount have been sent to New York for approval.

Arthur's total assessment is $415,125.00. The population of the town is made up as follows:—Roman Catholics, 396; Methodists, 253; Presbyterians, 235; Anglicans, 134; Latter Day Saints, 11; Jews, 11; Disciple, 6; total 1019.

Collingwood Town Council decided to have the Mayor and Town Solicitor Birnie report upon the irregularities disclosed by the judicial enquiry into the vote on the Imperial Steel Wire Co. by-law, and Mr. Birnie intimated that there should be arrests.

Master Wilton Rielly, only son of A. W. Rielly, V.S., of Grand Valley, sustained a broken collarbone the other day while coasting down the pavement on a little wagon. The lad lost control and over the edge tumbled off hard enough to break the bone.

Mrs. Harriet Shunn, of London, Ont., received word through a firm of old country solicitors that she is a joint heir to an estate in Ireland that is valued at $11,000,000. Mrs. Shunn, who is about 50 years old, with her husband, has been a resident of London most of her life. They are in comfortable circumstances.

Last summer Mr. T. Stump, of Rockwood, caught two young red foxes. Recently two young ones were born and both were jet black. If these valuable little fellows live and grow to their full height they will mean $3,000 cash for the owner. The older pair are all red except for a little black spot on each, which proves it is possible for black foxes to be born from red parents.

A couple whose combined ages aggregated 137 years were married in Shelburne a week ago Saturday. They were Henry Pannel, aged 72, of Galt, and Mrs. Sarah Irwin, aged 65, of Edmonton, Alta. The ceremony was performed on Saturday morning at the rectory by Rev. R. J. S. Adamson. In the afternoon they will visit friends before leaving for their home in Edmonton, Alta.

The Guelph papers tell an interesting story of the presentation by Prof. George Peter Armstrong, of Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass., of a valuable gold watch to License Inspector O'Brien, of Guelph, in recognition of the Inspector's temerity when a boy, 39 years ago, in saving the life of the professor when they were swimming together in the River Speed at their boyhood home in Eramosa.

MEDICAL INSPECTION FOR SCHOOLS.

A paper on medical inspection in rural schools, which was read by Dr. McClinton, of Elmvale, before the Trustees Department of the Ontario Educational Association, has been printed for circulation and should be read by all who are interested in the physical well-being of the boys and girls in our rural school districts. Medical inspection of school children is a subject that has received considerable attention in recent years. In a number of cities and towns some system of medical inspection has been introduced and is giving results that are more or less satisfactory. One of the great obstacles in the way of the general adoption of the inspection system is the heavy expense entailed. This applies particularly to the country schools where the cost of inspection is bound to be higher proportionately than in cities or towns. In his paper Dr. McClinton suggests that teachers in training be more deeply impressed with the importance of school hygiene in all its bearings and that they also be given some instruction in first aid work. The Public School Inspector, he further suggests, when making his official visits might refer to the great importance of good health, inquire as to the medical inspection of the pupils and commend inspection to teachers and pupils and also in his report to the trustees. For inspection purposes, it is suggested that the School Board be urged to appoint the best doctor available as Medical Inspector, with such remuneration as will pay him for faithful and earnest service. Uniformity of duties and efficiency of service would be best procured by the preparation and publication of a small Manual or Guide Book for Medical Inspectors. The Medical Inspector, Dr. McClinton holds, should be required to make one or more visits during the year, to address the pupils on the object of his visit and the importance of good health, make a personal examination of the children and send report cards to the parents or guardians where treatment is necessary. It would also be his duty to report upon the sanitary condition of the schoolhouse, outbuildings and water supply. For the present Dr. McClinton's opinion appears to be that medical inspection should be voluntary, with the School Trustees taking the initiative by appointing a Medical Inspector and being encouraged to do this by a grant from the Department, which would partly defray the expense of inspection. When the campaign of practical education which will be carried on in this way shall have awakened the people to the importance and benefits of systematic medical inspection the way will be prepared for compulsory inspection for the entire Province. Dr. McClinton's paper suggests many important matters and while the subject with which he deals is a difficult one it is deserving of earnest and serious consideration.

AN ELECTION COMING.

Ontario Government Likely to Go to the Country Shortly.

Dufferin Conservatives Will Hold Convention in a Few Weeks.

A Provincial election is almost certain to take place this summer. It may be stated upon reliable authority that the Whitney Government has virtually decided to appeal to the country at an early date. On Saturday last the Toronto World made the announcement that June 29th was the date settled upon for the election and that writs would be issued in the course of a few days. This is of course unauthoritative, but it is regarded as a pretty shrewd guess at the probable date. The 29th is the last Monday in the month and there are several considerations, which make it about the most suitable date that could be selected for the polling. The Globe, the chief Opposition organ, also predicts an early election. While it does not name a date, the Big Liberal daily says that an election is probable within eight weeks. The decision to go to the country this summer is probably due in a large measure to the poor health of Sir James Whitney. It is recognized that the Premier's physical infirmity will compel him to retire from the leadership of the party at an early date. By bringing on the election at the present time the party will reap the advantage which his leadership and prestige gives.

The probability of an early election means that the two parties will soon be busy getting candidates in the field all over the province. Dufferin Conservatives will hold a convention late this month or early in June, at which, The Banner understands, candidates will be nominated for the Provincial and Federal houses. Mr. Jno. A. Cornelius, who is President of the County Association, has not issued the call for a convention but he has the selection of a date under consideration and an announcement may be expected at any moment. Mr. John Best, the present member, will seek renomination as the party's candidate for the Federal House. At present he appears to have the field practically to himself. C. R. McKeown, M.P.P. will endeavor to capture the Provincial nomination for another term and seems to be quite sanguine as to his prospect of succeeding. He will have considerable opposition in the Convention, as there are several aspirants for the distinction of being Conservative standard-bearer. Prominent amongst these are ex-Warden John Bryan, who will have strong backing in Amaranth, East Luther and Grand Valley, and ex-reeve John A. Cornelius, who is banking upon the solid support of the East Garry delegation. As President of the County Association Mr. Cornelius is in pretty close touch with the party leaders in the different municipalities and it is rumored that he may receive considerable support in the north end of the county. Ex-reeve S. C. McKee, of East Luther, is said to be another likely candidate. The names of Reeve Marshall, of Mono, Mayor Island and Deputy-Reeve J. J. White, of Orangeville, are also mentioned, but it is doubtful if any of these gentlemen have thought seriously of allowing their names to go before the Convention. Rev. J. R. Bell, who was strongly urged to oppose Mr. McKeown at the last Provincial election, was non-committal when interviewed by The Banner while in town last Tuesday. He explained that the only reason he had for considering a nomination at last election was dissatisfaction with certain local conditions. While she did not say so in as many words, he gave the impression that matters along certain lines were not altogether to his liking even now. The probability is that Mr. Bell will be at the Convention with something of interest to tell the delegates. As far as can be learned there are not any aspirants for the Provincial seat in the north of the county. Opinion there seems to incline in favor of giving Mr. McKeown another term.

The Liberals, we understand, have not made any arrangements to call a Convention. Whether they will place a candidate in the field or not is problematical.

THE TOWN COUNCIL.

Outsiders May Take Orders for Clothing From Samples.

Solicitor Holds that They Cannot be Prosecuted Under Hawkers and Peddlers By-Law.

Monday night's sitting of the Town Council was brief and uneventful. The business was mainly of the routine variety and most of the session was devoted to the consideration of a fairly large batch of corporation accounts. The accounts passed by the Council were :—

Pine River Light & Power Co., $138.55 ; C. C. G. Hannah, $10.70 ; Robert Walker, $2.13 ; Thos. Campbell, $3.91 ; James Graham, $10.50 ; Lathwell & Son, $11.73 ; Isaac Hughson, $5 ; James Funsten, $3.60 ; William Gurd & Co., $3.15 ; J. H. Hughes, $105 ; Gillespie Bros., $14.40 ; Bell Telephone Co., 25c ; Arch. Irwin, $3.90 ; The Orangeville Sun, $100 ; John Cruikshank, $3 ; J. A. Matthews, $9.40.

The Fire Brigade was refunded the charge for the use of the Town Hall for their recent concert.

The Clerk read a letter from John Best, M.P., enclosing copy of a letter from Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, to Mr. Best relative to the 36th Regiment. In his letter the Minister states :—

"So far as the new Regiment is concerned, there is no decision as to where the number 36 will go. The proposition is to put a Regiment in West Toronto and West York and another with Headquarters at Orangeville. These changes will likely be carried out during the coming year, but not this year."

Mr. A. A. Hughson, town solicitor, gave it as his opinion that a traveller who was in town a short time ago taking orders for a merchant tailor in Toronto could not be successfully prosecuted under the Hawkers and Peddlars By-law. In support of his opinion the solicitor quotes Mr. Justice Galt as stating :—

"Cloths are 'dry goods' and if the defendant had sold, or offered for sale, imported cloths in bales or large quantities according to sample, and to persons not wholesale or retail dealers in the goods he would have been liable to conviction under the by-law. He did nothing like that. He merely exposed samples of cloth and solicited orders for clothing to be afterwards manufactured from such cloth, and to be then delivered to the parties giving the orders. Without entering into the matter more fully, I think I must hold that that is not an offence within the statute, and that the clothing for which he solicited orders, after exposing his samples of cloths from which it was to be manufactured, is not intended by the Act to be comprehended in the term 'dry goods'."

The town by-law, the solicitor states, is drawn in the same general terms as the Statute.

John Cruikshank addressed the Council in support of his petition for a cement sidewalk on the south side of Elizabeth St. from Prince of Wales St. to Faulkner St. The petition was referred to the Streets Committee for report at next meeting.

The Street Lighting Committee recommended payment of an account of the Pine River Light & Power Co.

A motion was passed confirming the action of the Finance Committee in making the sale of the Dods Knitting Mill debentures to the Sterling Bank at 98½ with accrued interest.

Confirmation in St. Mark's

His Lordship, Dr. Clarke, Bishop of Niagara, will be present at St. Mark's Church on Sunday morning next, and will preach the sermon. He will confirm a large class of candidates during the service, who have been prepared by the Rector, Rev. Geo. W. Tebbs. A special feature of the service will be the presence of most of those who have been confirmed on former occasions by the present Bishop.

A WIDE DISCREPANCY.

Difference of $201,995 in Madoc Bank's Position Since Last Annual Statement.

Funds of Bank Used for Speculative Purposes.

The audit into the affairs of the Dale Bank in Madoc by Webb, Read, Callaghan, Hegan and Company, who have just completed an examination of the books of the private bank on behalf of the shareholders, shows a discrepancy of $201,955.56 between the last annual statement of assets and the condition of finances when the bank closed its doors three weeks ago.

	On the books.	Real amounts.	Deficiencies.
Overdrafts	$33,776.89	$30,547.12	$3,231.77
Current loans and bills	201,428.85	143,107.57	58,321.28
Osler and Hammond	23,014.48	22,630.00	384.48
Debenture account	166,078.30	62,683.00	128,025.30
Mortgage account	86,122.33	76,111.02	10,011.31
J. C. Dale's account	35,433.41	23,943.38	11,489.83

Subtracting $9,508.41 for miscellaneous collections and cash, the total deficiency amounts to $201,955.56.

An interesting feature of the report is the amount shown by the audit to be owing by the various members of the Dale family. These are given as follows :

J. C. Dale, overdraft, current account	$30,747.06
J. C. Dale, overdraft insurance account	129.46
J. C. Dale, overdraft building account	4,586.89
J. C. Dale, jr., note	10,107.90
John Dale, note	19,854.72
Total	$65,396.03

Against these loans the bank holds as security real estate to the value of $25,943.58. The note of John Dale, a son of the manager, was to help him to carry on the business of the Madoc Piano Company, Edmonton, while the note of J. C. Dale, jr., was found in a special envelope in the vault.

"We traced same back," say the auditors, "and found it had been renewed continuously from 1902. The origin of the note was found in two payments made to Osler and Hammond, stock brokers, Toronto, on April 7, 1902, for $4,000, and to A. E. Ames and Co., stock brokers, Toronto, on April 15, 1902, for $2,602,-12."

The same type of financial operations, the auditors say, account for the large discrepancy of $125,000 in the debenture account. The discrepancy in the overdraft account is chiefly made up of bad debts written off and interest accrued. In commenting on this the auditors say : "We understand that practically no collateral was held against any of these overdrafts, which total over $30,000."

In dealing with the debenture account the auditors say that the deficiency is accounted for by losses in speculations on the stock exchange. The only legitimate loss was that of $10,000, invested in the defunct Ontario Bank. It was also found that the speculative stocks were purchased in the name of J. C. Dale, and not of the bank.

The total amount spent on real estate was $53,026.94, the largest single item being $21,448.37 for 1,280 acres of land near Wainwright. The rest is in city lots in Winnipeg, Edmonton and Port Mann. Payments still to be made on these total $16,-116. The real estate operations are touched on in the mortgage account, which shows a deficit of $10,011.31. The auditors say : "This debt is, of course, subject to the realization of mortgage loans and real estate. We are given to understand that some of the Winnipeg real estate has lately been assessed at a much higher figure than it actually cost."

The fluctuations of the successes and failures in the speculation are shown in Mr. Dale's account, which amounts to $23,943.38, and shows a deficit of $11,489.83. On Aug. 1, 1911, the overdraft was only $176.80, but owing to payments made to brokers and agents it rapidly increased. In concluding, the report refers to the annual statement issued on May 31, 1913, and certified as correct by J. C. Dale and J. C. Dale, jr. It says : "It would be instructive to have these two gentlemen explain how they accounted for a surplus of assets over liabilities of $66,000 odd being converted into a deficiency of over $132,000 in the course of ten months."

Local Option in Grand Valley.

Discussing the advent of local option, the Grand Valley Star & Vidette states in last week's issue :—

"Just what the immediate effect on hotel accommodation is not known. The Dominion Hotel closes, as the Forgrave boys disposed of the furniture of the house by auction on Wednesday. The Grand Central will continue as it has for the last two years. There is a rumor that the Commercial may close up, under certain conditions ; but nothing definite will be known until the time arrives. The temperance hotel move is now progressing, sufficient capital subscribed, but active operations are delayed for a short time. It is understood the officials have under consideration offers from the Commercial and the Grand Central, and a valuation made of the contents, and when these are considered in light of other matters, a practical move will be made towards providing accommodation. In the meantime, however, there will be plenty of hotel accommodation for the public.

Orangeville Presbytery.

Orangeville Presbytery held a well-attended meeting in St. Andrew's Church on Tuesday. Presbytery sustained the call from Knox Church, Shelburne, to Rev. R. B. Stephenson, of Tavistock, and made provisional arrangements for the induction of the new pastor on Tuesday, June 3rd. The following ministers were selected to take part in the induction service :—Rev. Geo. Kendall, of Dundalk, to preach the sermon ; Rev. Bell-Smith, of Hornings Mills to address the minister, and Rev. D. J. Lane, Grand Valley, to address the congregation. Rev. J. R. Bell, Moderator of Presbytery, will preside and Rev. W. M. Morris, the interim Moderator, will relate the steps leading up to the call. The call will be considered by Stratford Presbytery, of which Mr. Stephenson is now a member, at a meeting on May 19th. Presbytery passed a resolution recognizing Maxwell, McIntyre and Feversham as one pastoral charge. A motion was subsequently put through appointing Rev. Geo. Kendall, of Dundalk, Moderator of the charge. The following commissioners were appointed to the General Assembly which meets in Woodstock in June :—Rev. A. J. Fowlie, Camilla, Rev. J. A. Black, Mono Mills, Rev. G. W. Rose, Corbetton, Rev. Dr. Armstrong, Alton, Robt. Knox, Swinton Park, Henry Williams, Eugenia, T. Crosby, Badjeros, and Mr. Cation, Mayfield. The givings for Missions in the Presbytery during 1913 were about $500 over the contributions for the preceding year.

Manual Training.

The Public School Board is taking steps to introduce Manual Training into the Orangeville School. Last week a consignment of fifteen manual training benches reached town from Berlin and will be placed in the old Council Chamber, which will be fitted up for a manual training room. Mr. T. G. Porter will act as instructor.

Alliston baseballists have organized the Maple Leaf Baseball Club.

The 36th Regiment.

At last meeting of the Shelburne Council, the Clerk read a letter from Hon. Sam. Hughes, Minister of Militia, to Mr. John Best, M.P. relative to the proposed changes in the 36th Regiment. The letter stated :—"So far as the new Regiment is concerned there is no decision as to where the number 36 will go. The proposition is to put a Regiment in West Toronto and West York, and another with headquarters at Orangeville. These changes will likely be carried out during the coming year."

The Foresters will erect a new home of very pretentious design for their orphanage at Oakville this summer.

MULMUR.

On Monday evening, April 27th, the members of St. Luke's Church to the number of about 50 met at the home of Mrs. Catherine Armstrong, of the 7th line, Mono, for the purpose of presenting her daughter, Miss Maggie Armstrong, with a silver tea service and casserole as a token of their appreciation of her services as organist, which position she has held for four years. Rev. Mr. Gray called the meeting to order and Miss Lucy Irwin read the following address:—

Dear Miss Armstrong:

As you are about to leave us for a few months, we, the members and friends of St. Luke's congregation, have assembled to spend a social time before saying good-bye.

We have chosen this occasion to express to you our appreciation of the hearty interest you have ever manifested in our church work.

When we remember that those kindly and helpful services were rendered many times under the most trying circumstances we feel deeply grateful for your unselfishness and self sacrifice. Indeed it ever seemed to us that in your devotion to duty as organist all thought of labor and self were forgotten.

It is therefore with a deep sense of your splendid assistance that we herewith present to you this silver tea service and casserole and desire your acceptance of the same as a token of appreciation and gratitude for your excellent services as organist of St. Luke's Church.

Signed on behalf of the congregation.

Miss Lucy Irwin
Miss Bertha Little
Miss Annie Moore.

The presentation was made by Misses Bertha Little and Annie Moore. Miss Armstrong was taken completely by surprise and asked Mr. Gray to reply on her behalf. After the presentation the remainder of the evening was spent in games and music. Light refreshments were served by the ladies of the church, after which all wended their ways homeward after a happily spent evening. Miss Armstrong is leaving to visit friends in Saskatoon and Elinora, Alta.

CALEDON.

On Monday of last week Mr. Louis Howitz returned home from Inglewood, where he had been employed by the Shales Co., Ltd., and complained of feeling unwell. Dr. Thomas was immediately summoned and after a careful diagnosis pronounced it typhoid pneumonia. Mr. Howitz's condition was considered serious for a time, but we are pleased to state that the danger is past and a complete recovery is hoped for in the very near future.

Mrs. Thomas, of Toronto, is visiting at the home of her nephew, Dr. J. T. Thomas.

We note that May 1st has been declared by Mayor Hocken as "clean-up day" in Toronto and think it would be a good idea for our Mayor to follow suit, not that our town is any worse in this respect than some others we have seen, but it is what every place needs at this season of the year. We hope; Mr. Editor, to see the proclamation published in your valuable paper next week.

WAKEFUL BABIES

If your baby does not sleep, if he is cross, cries a great deal and will not be comforted, that is the time to give him Baby's Own Tablets. They promote sleep—not the drugged unnatural kind obtained through the use of "soothing" mixtures, but that refreshing natural sleep of the healthy child. The Tablets banish all stomach and bowel complaints—the direct cause of crossness and sleeplessness. Concerning them Mrs. E. Medras, Grand Bois, Que., says: "When I began using Baby's Own Tablets baby was so troubled with constipation he would not sleep day or night. Now all this trouble has vanished and he is a strong, healthy child." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The annual Sunday School Convention for the Deanery of Grey will be held in Owen Sound on May 12th, 1914.

R. W. King a few days ago sold his 200-acre farm on the 14th con., Luther, to a Mr. Morden for $8,200.

POETRY TRULY GREAT.

Matthew Arnold's Rule by Which It May Be Tested.

There can be no more useful help for discovering what poetry belongs to the class of the truly excellent and can therefore do us most good than to have always in one's mind lines and expressions of the great masters and to apply them as a touchstone to other poetry. Of course we are not to require this other poetry to resemble them. It may be very dissimilar. But if we have any fact we shall find them when we have lodged them well in our minds an infallible touchstone for detecting the presence or absence of high poetic quality and also the degree of this quality in all other poetry which we may place beside them. Short passages, even single lines, will serve our turn quite sufficiently. * * *

Take of Shakespeare a line or two of Henry IV's expostulation with sleep:

Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast
Seal up the ship boy's eyes and rock his brains
In cradle of the rude, imperious surge? * * *

And take as well Hamlet's dying request to Horatio:

If thou didst ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity awhile,
And in this harsh world draw thy breath in pain
To tell my story. * * *

Take of Milton that Miltonic passage:

Darken'd so, yet shone
Above them all the archangel, but his face
Deep scars of thunder had intrenched, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. * * *

Add two such lines as:

And courage never to submit or yield
And what is else not to be overcome * * *

And finish with the exquisite close to the loss of Proserpine, the loss

* * * which cost Ceres all that pain
To seek her through the world.

These few lines, if we have tact and can use them, are enough even of themselves to keep clear and sound our judgments about poetry, to save us from fallacious estimates of it, to conduct us to a real estimate.—Matthew Arnold, "The Study of Poetry."

Nerves in Terrible Condition Would fall to Floor from sheer Exhaustion

"Your Medicine Helped When Doctors Failed"

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes:—"Before I began taking Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition, dizzy spells came over me, and I would fall to the floor, and I could not as much as sweep the floor without fainting unless they took me out in the air. Now I can wash and work a lot, and your Medicine helped me when the Doctors failed. I felt as though it was a God-send to me.

I hope you will use my name wherever you like so that if there are any others suffering as I have done, they may be benefited by using your Medicine for it will do all it claims to do. I think it is the best of Medicines. Dr. Chase's Ointment is the best that can be had for Piles."

Restores Wasted Nerves

Few people realize what an important part the nerves play in the condition of the health, and many doctors feel helpless when the nerves go wrong because they do not understand diseases of the nerves or their treatment.

If you read the letters which appear in this paper almost daily from people who have been rescued from discouraging and distressing nervous diseases by use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, you will soon believe in the efficiency of this treatment.

When headaches, sleeplessness, irritability and nervousness make your life miserable, be warned of the approach of nervous prostration, paralysis and locomotor ataxia, and restore the feeble, starved nerves by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. No treatment is so certain to benefit you. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Write for booklet.

YOUR HAIR NEEDS PARISIAN SAGE

It Quickly Removes Dandruff.

Just because your hair is full of dandruff, thin streaky, dull and never will do up to look pretty, do not despair. Beautiful hair, thick fluffy, lustrous and absolutely free from dandruff is only a matter of care.

Parisian Sage frequently applied will work wonders. Just one application stops itching head, removes dandruff and all excessive oil. It goes right to the hair roots and furnishes the nourishment needed—the hair becomes soft, fluffy, abundant and radiant with life.

Parisian Sage not only saves the hair but stimulates it to grow long and heavy. Get a 50-cent bottle from F. S. Pickering at once. There is no other "Just-as-good."

Son — Why do people say "Dame Gossip?"

Dangers In Rare Beefsteak.

You may like your beefsteak rare, but there is danger in eating any meat not well cooked. Measles in cows leave boxed up parasites in the bovine flesh. You do not notice them with the naked eye, but they are there, and if they are not killed by thorough cooking they will cause tapeworms in the digestive organization of the human system, and then follow associated diseases and discomforts.—Farm and Fireside.

Just Like the Automobile.

Sportsman (to enthusiastic motorist whom he had mounted for fox hunt and who is unhorsed)—Hello! What's wrong? Friend—Couldn't throttle her down, steering gear wouldn't work, missed one of the pedals, and then I fell out.—London Punch.

Cause For Complaint.

"The manager, you say, cuts your part in the piece to another member of the company. Admitted. But you can't sue him for that."

"Can't I? He took my character away, didn't he?"—London Answers.

The honor we receive from those who stand in fear of us is not true honor.—Montaigne.

She Couldn't Hear Them.

"I was surprised to learn that that man is married."

"How did you learn it? You may be mistaken."

"No chance for a mistake. He says he is in favor of going back to the old shin plasters and having small bills for 5, 10, 25 and 50 cents."

"But I don't see"—

"Bills don't rattle together."—Houston Post.

Returning a Favor.

"It's going to be war to the knife," declared the suburban man, who was feeding his chickens.

"What now?" asked the friend.

"Why, Blinks sent me a box of axle grease and advised me to use it on my lawn mower."

"Well?"

"Well, I sent it back and told him to use it on his daughter's voice."—Lippincott's.

Wrong Both Ways.

"What is that tune you were playing on the bugle last night?"

"That was not a bugle," replied the cornet virtuoso rather stiffly.

"Oh, well, if you're so particular as all that it didn't sound like a tune either."—Exchange.

Perseverance.

Few things are impossible in themselves. It is not so much means as perseverance that is wanting to bring them to a successful issue.—Rochefoucauld.

Life without liberty is joyless, but life without joy may be great. The greatness of life is sacrifice.—Ouida.

Her Chin.

Dawson—The facial features plainly indicate character and disposition. In selecting your wife, were you governed by her chin?—Spenlow—No, but I have been ever since we married.

In the Sideshow.

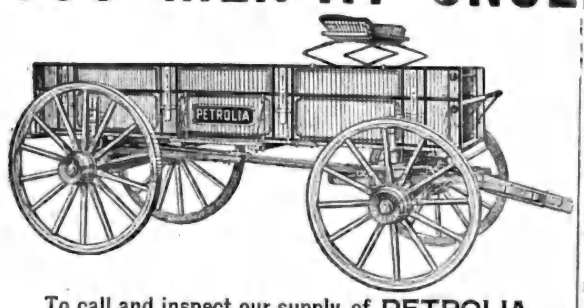
Bad For the Laurels.

William Dean Howells, according to the Washington Star, was admonishing a young novelist, who, after writing a fine novel, had produced only slight commercial things.



"Two critics," he said to the young man, "were discussing a certain author.

"'His laurels,' said the first critic, 'already seem faded and bedraggled.'

"'That,' the other critic agreed, 'is because he has been resting on them.'"

THE CANNING FAMILY

First Settled in Wiltshire and Removed to Ireland in Time of Elizabeth.

Has Furnished Great Britain with a Prime Minister and Many Eminent Men.

A recent sketch of The Ballymena (Ireland) Weekly Telegraph contains an interesting sketch of the Canning Family, an old English and North of Ireland house, with a long and honorable record of service to State and Church. The sketch possesses local interest from the fact that the Cannings who reside in Mono township are a branch of the family. Garvagh, the family seat, is a pretty Ulster town, which became a place of considerable importance soon after the Ulster plantation. Mr. R. G. Canning, who has been in the saw milling business in Mono for many years, is a cousin of Baron Garvagh, the present owner of Garvagh House. The Telegraph's sketch reads as follows:—

The name of Canning is derived from the manor of All Cannings in Wiltshire, at which the family was originally seated, and the senior line continued until it terminated in coheiresses in the time of Henry VII. The first on record is Richard de Kanynges, who filled the office of priest at Little Cheveril in 1299; another is John de Kanynges, who became abbot of the Monastery at Abingdon, his elevation being confirmed by Edward VII.; and the next is a younger son, Robert Canynges, who settled in Bristol, and who founded a branch which became the most eminent family of that city during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. He first appears as an eminent merchant in 1322. He was father of William Canynges, who represented Bristol in several successive Parliaments, and was no fewer than six times Mayor of that city. His son, John Canynge, was also member of Parliament and Mayor. Amongst the issue of John Canynge was William, who undertook the restoration of St. Mary Radcliffe Church, still the chief ornament of Bristol, and is the hero of the Rowley Poems (Chatterton). This William Canning was twice M. P. for Bristol, and to the Mayoralty of that city, which has become a sort of heirloom in his family, he was elected no fewer than five times. He was the celebrated Mayor of Bristol in the reign of Edward IV., and received during his third mayoralty Margaret of Anjou, and during his fourth King Edward IV. Large sums of money having been advanced by him to aid his sovereign, Edward IV., it was proposed to him by way of compensation, that he should marry a natural daughter of the King. Faithful, however, to the memory of his first wife he did not listen to the proposal, and in order to evade the King's command took holy orders. He died in 1476, dean of the college of Westbury, which he founded. His brother, Sir Thomas Canninge, was Lord Mayor of London. Thus we might go on to enumerate the distinctions of many other members of the family in succeeding years. Coming to the George Canning, already mentioned, we learn that he came to Ireland from Garton, Co. Warwick, having obtained in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, a grant of the manor of Garvagh, where he settled. He had also a lease from the Ironmongers Company of their estate at Agivey, called the manor at Lizard, which did not expire until nearly 200 years afterwards. In the calendar of Irish State papers for the reign of James I. there is a good description given of the castle that he built for the protection of those lands. His eldest son, Paul Canning, built the church at Agivey, but died soon afterwards, and was succeeded by his brother, William Canning, who, as stated, perished in the rebellion under O'Neill. He left an only son (George) who inherited his father's spirit, for he commanded a company within the walls of Derry during the celebrated siege of the city, and, although attainted of his lands by James II., was succeeded at Garvagh by his son, also named George. This George Canning greatly improved his estate, and many improvements in the town date from his proprietorship. His successor at Garvagh was his son, Stratford Canning, who was born in 1703, and whose eldest son, George Canning, barrister, was disinherited, having incurred the displeasure of his father by his marriage. This George Canning was father to the George Canning who rose to be Prime Minister of England. Having passed through Eton and Oxford with more than ordinary eclat, entered early into public life, and, for several years, filled some of the higher offices of State, sustained alone by his transcendant talents and enlightened views, he became First Lord of the Treasury, Prime Minister and Chancelor of the Exchequer. But scarcely had the hopes of the nation been raised by this most popular appointment than they were dissipated by his death, which occurred in August of the same year. His youngest son, Earl Canning, K.G., filled amongst other offices those of Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Postmaster-General, Governor-General and Viceroy of India. The Garvagh estates passed to Paul Canning, second son of Stratford Canning and his successors. The son of Paul Canning was father of the First Baron Garvagh, who married the fourth daughter of the First Marquis of Londonderry, and erected a fine residence in County Cavan, where the family owned great tracts of land. The Second Lord Garvagh, however, preferred Garvagh to County Cavan, and it was his wish that the family should be seated solely in Co. Londonderry, home of their ancestors. The present owner of Garvagh House, which was built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and twice enlarged since that time is the third Baron (Charles John Spencer George Canning), who was born in 1852, and who, as we have seen, is directly descended from the George Canning who in Elizabethan time came over from England to take possession. To estimate how much the town owes to the benefactions of the Cannings would be difficult. Garvagh has many permanent memorials of their generosity and that the happy family associations with the town may long continue is the wish of every resident.

DOCTORS DID NOT HELP HER

But Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Mrs. Bradley's Health—Her Own Statement.

Winnipeg, Canada. — "Eleven years ago I went to the Victoria Hospital, Montreal, suffering with a growth. The doctors said it was a tumor and could not be removed as it would cause instant death. They found that my organs were affected, and said I could not live more than six months in the condition I was in.

"After I came home I saw your advertisement in the paper, and commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took it constantly for two years, and still take it at times, and both my husband and myself claim that it was the means of saving my life. I highly recommend it to suffering women."—Mrs. ORILLA BRADLEY, 284 Johnson Ave., Winnipeg, Manitoba, Can.

Why will women take chances or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, etc.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

NEURALGIA

"NEARLY DROVE ME WILD, UNTIL I TOOK KEPHALDOL"

Mr. Thomas Cooper, Ludley, Sussex, England, was almost frantic with Neuralgia, when he first took a KEPHALDOL Tablet.

"I am nearly 74 years of age and have suffered with Neuralgia nearly all my life. A friend told me about KEPHALDOL and I had my people get me a 2s. package. I took two tablets as soon as I got them and quickly received relief. It was joy."

So great became the fame of KEPHALDOL Tablets abroad that their reputation spread to this country. The demand for KEPHALDOL grew so rapidly that arrangements were made to establish a Canadian office and supply all the druggists. These wonderful tablets, the prescription of Vienna's famous nerve specialist, Herr Doctor Stohr, have brought welcome relief to hundreds suffering from Neuralgia and Headaches, the ravages of La Grippe, Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago, Pain in the Back, and in fact any pain.

If you cannot get the 50c tubes at your druggist's, write Kephaldol Limited, 31 Latour Street, Montreal.

THE KIND JUDGE.

A man had been arrested for stealing and was brought before Judge Blank, who was noted for his kindness of heart.

"Have you ever been convicted to imprisonment before?" asked the judge, not unkindly.

"No, never," exclaimed the man, suddenly and dramatically bursting into tears. "Never."

"Well, well, don't cry, my man," said the sympathetic judge. "It needn't trouble you. You're going to be."

ZAM-BUK

MRS. A. SAICH, of Cannington Manor, Sask., Writes:—"My brother suffered severely from eczema. The sores were very extensive, and burned like coals into his flesh. Zam-Buk took out all the fire, and quickly gave him ease. Within three weeks of commencing with Zam-Buk treatment, every sore had been cured."

This is but one of the many letters we are constantly receiving from people who have proved the healing powers of Zam-Buk. For eczema, piles, sores, burns, cuts and all skin troubles there is nothing like this wonderful balm. No skin disease should be considered incurable until Zam-Buk has been tried.

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By
E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

"Don't ask me to be patriotic, then," she remarked. "And yet you know, one feels nearer to life here. Levity fits the Parisian like a glove, his very capacity for it seems belittling. See how different it is here, what a struggle it all is to appear lighthearted. The forced smile cracks the rouge on these women's cheeks. It is hideously unnatural, one feels conscious all the time of the tradegy underneath. And the men, those who are not flushed with wine, are dull-footed, pale. They come and go like spectral figures. One feels that they are only adding to the toils of the day in this half-hearted pursuit of relaxation."

Brendon looked at her curiously.

"I wonder," he said, "is this cynicism of the very young, or do we really seem like it to you?"

"I am not young," Anna answered, "and I am not a cynic. If I am unjust I shall find it out very soon. I simply speak of things as I see them."

Brendon, with regret, took out his latchkey. They passed into the dimly-lit hall of the boarding house, and Anna, after discreet good-nights, went softly upstairs. The two young men tiptoed their way into a small room at the back of the house, called by courtesy the smoking-room. Horace, roused from his slumbers, was bribed to bring them whiskey.

CHAPTER X.

Brendon's Luck.

Paris, 15th ——

You have not kept your promise. You were to have let me know how this mad enterprise of yours prospered. Yet since you left Paris I have not had a single line from you. All that I know, I have gleaned from Sydney's none too coherent letters.

I cannot picture you in a Montague Street boarding-house. Have you not begun to realize yourself that you have made a mistake? Come back here, Anna! A thousand times I have felt like biting out my tongue which sent you into such ridiculous and inappropriate exile. Come back here, and I will force the genius which is in you out of your fingers to the canvas. You took my hasty words too seriously. They were not meant to be final. Come back, or I shall fetch you. The savour has gone out of my days. I am restless, and my work wearies me. Come and I will drag you up to success. Mind, this is a warning. I shall keep my word. It is a matter of ten hours, of half a day, a trifle! If you do not come to me, I shall come to you.

Ever your lover,
David Courtlaw.

The letter dropped from her fingers. Anna was alone, and the mask of her unchanging, high spirits was for a moment laid aside. She was a little paler and a little thinner. There were dark rims under her eyes, soft now with unshed tears. For this three weeks had been the hardest of her life. There had been disappointments and humiliations, and although she hated to admit it even to herself, she was in desperate straits. Nevertheless, she was still fighting. She drew pen and paper towards her, and clenched her teeth as she wrote.

Dear Friend,—

What nonsense! Your words scarcely even hastened my decision. For months I had been struggling with that hideous inability to express a single coherent thing, with a dead brush and stiff fingers. In all our friendship there is nothing for which I have felt more grateful to you than when you paid me the rare compliment of telling me an unpleasant truth.

Why should you think and write of me as an outcast? Believe me, life is very amusing here. I have not finally settled which of the arts or professions shall have the honor of providing me with my daily bread, but that will come. One thing, however, I have finally decided. I have put my brushes away absolutely and inevitably, at any rate for the present. Nothing shall induce me to change my mind as regards this. Nor shall I for some time at any rate return to Paris! You know, dear friend, that neither my instincts nor my training incline towards the conventional, but when you write me as though you were in some measure the keeper of my ways you force me to remind you of our last interview, and the answer which I gave you. You must please consider that, for the present at any rate, as final. It is enough for me to say this, is it not?

Some day I will amuse you with an account of my life here. Just now I am not in the humour for letter writing. Sydney is a dear boy, and has been very kind to me indeed. Don't write again just yet. Letters are always a distraction as well as a solace. Just now I want to concentrate myself and my thoughts upon one thing, and one thing only.

Ever yours,
Anna.

"And that one thing," Anna said to herself softly, as she leaned for a moment back in her chair, "is how to pay my next week's bill to Mrs. White. It ought not to be much. I have gone without dinner for three nights, and—come in."

Sydney Courtlaw followed his timid knock. Anna raised her eyebrows at the sight of him. He was in evening dress: swallow-tailed coat and white tie.

"Is this a concession to Mrs. White?" she asked, laughing. "How gratified she must have been! If only I had known I would have made an effort to get home in time for dinner."

"Not exactly," he answered nervously. "Please forgive my coming up, Miss Pellissier, but you have not been down to dinner for three nights, and—Brendon and I—we were afraid that you might be unwell."

"Never better in my life," Anna declared, briskly. "I had lunch very late to-day, and I did not get home in time for dinner."

She smiled grimly at the recollection of that lunch—tea and roll at an aerated bread shop. Sydney was watching her eagerly.

"I'm glad you're all right," he said, "because we want you to do us a favor. Brendon's had an awful stroke of luck."

"I'm delighted," she exclaimed. "Do tell me all about it."

"He only heard this afternoon," Sydney continued. "An uncle in New York is dead, and has left him loads of money. A lawyer has come all the way from America about it. We want to celebrate, and we want you to help us. Brendon suggests supper at the Carlton. We meant to make it dinner and a theatre, but you were not home."

Anna shook her head dubiously.

"It is ever so nice of you to have waited," she said, "but you know the arrangement we made. Shares in everything, and——"

"But this is an exception, surely," Sydney protested. "Besides, you insisted upon being hostess that first evening, and this is only a return. Don't disappoint Brendon. It's an awful stroke of luck for him, you know, especially as he hated the bank so, but it'll spoil it all for him if you don't come. He'll be quite hurt, too."

Anna hesitated. She was really very hungry indeed.

"You are quite sure that this is not an excuse of Mr. Brendon's? You boys have been so kind to me, and ——"

"Positive," Sydney declared. "It's a dead cert. I've seen the papers, and Brendon has heaps of money already to be going on with. You'll come, won't you? We thought of starting in half an hour's time, and try for a theatre somewhere on the way."

Anna nodded.

"Delightful!" she exclaimed. "I'll come. Run away now, please. I must see if I have a gown fit to wear."

In the drawing room below a whisper of Brendon's good fortune had gone round. Miss Amelia Ellicot held out both her hands, and looked inexpressible things into his eyes.

"You know that I am glad," she said to him, with a most becoming mixture of modesty and effusion. "I can't tell you how glad, before all these people."

She dropped her eyes, and wandered off to a remote corner of the room, whither Brendon did not follow her. Her mother made whispered comments to Mrs. White on Milly's sensitiveness, which were easily overheard by everyone in the room. Mr. Bullding, abandoning a position of portly ease upon the hearth-rug, came and patted Brendon gently on the back.

"Let me give you a word of advice, young man," he said solemly. "You will, I presume, abandon your present occupation and enjoy a brief period of idleness. Presently that idleness will begin to pall. You will look about for something to do. Go in for public life. There is nothing more expanding, more thoroughly satisfactory, than to serve one's country in one's leisure hours. You will never regret it. I speak, as I dare say you know, from experience. For fourteen years I represented Sprorton upon the Worcestershire County Council. I have only to show myself there to-day, and I am instantly recognised. Every man and boy in the place touches his hat to me. That sort of thing is always—er—most gratifying. Of course, it is scarcely likely that you will be able to begin your career with the County Council, that may come by-and bye, but there are many minor offices in which you may—may serve your apprenticeship to public life. I myself started by being the overseer of an important parish."

"Look here," he whispered. "You are fond of the theatre, and that sort of thing, aren't you? If you care for a little flutter in a new production—there's a gold mine in the piece, s'help me. I believe I could get you a fifth share. It's a comic opera, with some ripping songs and dances, bound to take like wildfire. Of course it means going behind when ever you like, and you stand O.K. with all the girls. Friend of mine in the City's running the syndicate. What do you say? Will you come down and see him?"

"I'll think about it," Brendon declared. "I fancy its scarcely in my line."

"But it's a real good thing," the young man urged, "I wouldn't mention it except for your being one of us here. It's a real bit of all right. I don't mind telling you I've money in it myself, and it's got to go, sure as my name's Gudden."

"I suppose, Mr. Brendon," she said, looking up at him with an engaging smile, "that we shall lose you now."

"Not just at present, I think," Brendon answered. "It will take several months to settle things up, and then I may have to go to America."

"It will be very nice if you stay with us till then," she said. "I am sure we shall all be sorry when you go. How smart you and Mr. Courtlaw look this evening! she added. "I suppose you are off to celebrate somewhere?"

"We are going out to supper," Brendon answered. "I am only sorry we can't take the whole lot of you," he added pleasantly.

"How nice of you!" Mrs. White murmured.

"Eighteen would be rather too many wouldn't it?" Miss Ellicot remarked, with a little conscious smile. "I think that supper parties are such fun."

"We thought of going to the Carlton," Brendon said.

"Oh!" Miss Ellicot's interjection was long drawn and expressive. "How perfectly lovely! It's the one place in the world I am dying to see. Do look around at all the people and the dresses, and find out who is there, and describe it all to us poor stay-at-homes to-morrow. Oh!"

This second interjection was of a different character. Anna stood upon the threshold buttoning her gloves, and something very like sensation rippled from one to the other. They had none of them seen Anna in evening dress. They had probably never been in the same room with a black gown fashioned by an expert Parisian dressmaker. She wore no jewels. Her neck and arms were bare. Her wonderful brown hair, curving low over her forehead, was drawn back with a grace which a professional coiffeur could scarcely have matched. Even her pallor seemed to add to that marvellous distinction of presence, so subtle and yet so unmistakably a gift. The women felt suddenly tawdry and old-fashioned. Miss Ellicot lost all faith in the blouse which a few moments ago had given her every satisfaction, and as for her ornaments, she could have torn them from her neck and arms and thrown them into the fireplace. She went slowly red and then pale. She had lost her place at 13, Montague Street. She was wholly and entirely eclipsed. There was not a male pair of eyes in the place which were not shining with admiration.

Anna, utterly unconscious, or at any rate indifferent to the sensation which she had evoked, came a little further into the room.

"Mr. Brendon is going to take us to the Carlton," she remarked pleasantly to Mrs. White. "Isn't it nice of him?"

"Very," Mrs. White answered, with some reserve. "Are you sure that you won't catch cold with nothing on your shoulders."

"Well, I shall have to risk it," Anna declared, with a soft little laugh. "I don't possess an opera cloak."

Miss Ellicot rose heroically.

"I will lend you mine!" she said. "I don't think you ought to go out like that."

Anna, who had seen Miss Ellicot's opera cloak, stopped her.

"It is so nice of you," she said, "but I really do not need it. I have a piece of lace outside I can twist round my head and shoulders. I am quite ready now, Mr. Brendon. Good night, everybody."

They departed, leaving behind them almost a dead silence. Mr. Gudden had done nothing but simply stare at Anna from the moment of her entrance. Even after her departure he remained looking at the door through which she had issued.

Miss Ellicot broke the spell.

"Well," she said impressively. "What there was about that dress, I can't imagine, except that it seemed more like a skin than anything, but I never saw anything look so indecent in my life."

"She looked like one of those new-fashioned posters," Mrs. White remarked, "or like one of those French women who come over to the music-halls, and drive about with mules and poodles with diamond bracelets."

Every one has something to say. Mr. Gudden alone was silent. He had removed to a distant window, and was standing there with folded arms.

"If I can't remember where I've seen her, who she is in two minutes," he muttered to himself, "I shall have fits. S'help me I shall."

HAD TO STOP WORK FROM THE PAIN

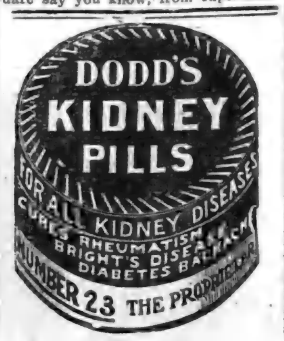
Suffered Ten Years Until "Fruit-a-tives" Cured Him

ST. THOMAS, ONT., May 22nd, 1913.

"I was troubled for ten years with the most distressing Constipation and Indigestion of the worst form.

No one could have been worse with these troubles than I was for this long time.

The pain from Indigestion was so severe that many times, I have had to stop work and lie down until the acute spasms passed away.



I took a lot of medicine—in fact, I guess I took about everything that was advertised—and gave them all a fair test—but got no relief. About a year ago, however, I was advised to try "Fruit-a-tives". I am mighty glad I did so for they seem to be made exactly for me.

They gave results in a very short time and I am now free from these diseases and enjoying perfect health.

My wife also used "Fruit-a-tives" and we both think they are the best medicine ever made."

Offsetting Competition

The thing for the merchants of this community to do in their own interests is to advertise faithfully, and to make their own announcements interesting and helpful to those whose trade and favor are desired.

The serious competitors of the retailors of this community are the big stores of the big cities—those that send out catalogues and have mail-order departments.

The poorest way to offset this competition is for our locol merchants to remain silent. For them not to "speak up" is to give the mail-order houses a better chance to get business from this community.

MEDICAL INSPECTION

Physician Urges Importance and Need of Inspection of Children in Rural Schools.

Paper Read at Recent Meeting of Ontario Educational Association.

Dr. I. B. McClinton, of Elmvale, read the following suggestive Paper on Medical Inspection in rural schools, at the recent meeting in Toronto of the Trustees Department of the Ontario Educational Association:

The importance of free public school education for the children of all classes and races in every country of the civilized world is now a well recognized and accepted fact. About 20 per cent. or one fifth of the entire population is of school age (if not actually enrolled in the public schools). Immense sums of money are required to equip and maintain these schools. In the United States alone over $400,000,000 is expended annually for this purpose and the fact that the greater part of this vast sum is raised by a self imposed tax, cheerfully voted and paid by the people is ample evidence that they fully realize the vital importance of the proper education of their children and will heartily appreciate anything further that may be done in that direction.

As early as 1833 thoughtful legislators in France recognized the importance of caring for the health and comfort of their school children, ordered medical inspection and a general oversight.

From this small beginning medical inspection has grown to its present status. For forty years little was accomplished. In 1874 Belgium and almost immediately afterwards Germany, Switzerland, Hungary, Austria, Norway, Sweden, Russia, England, North and South America and Japan recognizing the value of medical inspection of schools undertook to establish those systems which they deemed would best suit their requirements and satisfy their people. Often, like Solon's laws for the Athenians not the best they could make, but the best the people could keep or would appreciate. At the present time, England, Japan and Switzerland have national systems, Massachusetts a state system and British Columbia a provincial system of Public School Medical Inspection. Practically every city and important town in Canada and the United States has some system in operation.

So far as the general principles are concerned, the cause needs no defence.

In cities and large towns results are answering all objections and fast removing all prejudice. In rural districts very little has yet been done. The need perhaps has not been so keenly felt. Rural conditions are quite unlike those prevailing in our larger centres of congested population. In the country we have practically no poor, an abundance of good food, fresh air, pure water and some children. Also sufficient housing accommodation for double our population.

The fact that children are all too few makes them doubly precious and all the more deserving of our best attention. Too much, however, should not be attempted at once. Experience teaches that we must creep before we walk. Obviously the most necessary and important part of the work must be first taken up and dealt with in a way that will impress the parents most favorably and least excite that prejudice and opposition which often delays the successful operation of the most valuable scientific knowledge. The opposition to vaccination as a protective against small pox, and to serum injection as a preventive and cure for diphtheria is well known.

Hence in order to get the best results for the children we must in some measure secure the sympathy and co-operation of the Department of Education, the P. S. Inspector, the Teacher, the Medical Inspector, the Trustees, the parents and the children.

From the Department we might ask that the importance of school hygiene in all its bearings, and some knowledge of first aid, be more deeply impressed upon the teachers in training. The subject might also be taken up with profit at the summer sessions. Furthermore for the sake of uniformity and economy it would be well for the Department to supply blank-form record books, report cards, etc., on application to any rural school in the province, and further that a small grant (say $3 to $5) be given to each school where one or more satisfactory Medical Examinations of pupils has been made and recorded during the year.

Of the Public School Inspector we might ask that during each official visit he will refer to the great importance of good health, inquire as to the medical inspection of the pupils, commend the same to teachers and pupils as well as in his report to the trustees. Where a Medical Examination has been made and recorded these records should be examined and inquiry made as to whether the suggested treatment had been carried out. Where this has not been done he might urge both the parents and children to act upon the advice of the Medical Inspector impressing upon them the vital importance of prompt treatment.

The Teacher we would ask to thoroughly familiarize himself with such text books on Hygiene as are from time to time authorized by the Minister of Education, so that in his weekly talks to the pupils he combine accurate knowledge with his personality and the influence of the living voice. That in all cases where any symptoms are noticed, or even suspected, of communicable disease, the child be sent home and directed through the parents to the family physician or M.H.O. who will diagnose, and order either return to school or treatment as the case may require, and that obvious defects which admit of treatment be brought to the notice of the parents.

The central figure, the new feature, the chief factor is without doubt the Medical Inspector. Who shall he be? By whom employed? How paid and what duties shall be required of him? Each of these questions must be met and answered before medical inspection of rural schools can be successfully operated.

Always the best doctor possible or available should be chosen for this work. The Medical Health Officer has jurisdiction in all cases of communicable diseases, water supply and any unsanitary conditions which might affect either the school or the general public. His experience in such matters and enforced attendance at annual conventions of M.H.O.'s, should eminently qualify him for this position. Again his appointment would prevent such overlapping of duties and jurisdiction as would inevitably result should these positions be held by different physicians. On these grounds, therefore, it would seem to be highly desirable in rural districts where their duties would overlap and are usually very light, that the M.H.O. should be made Medical Inspector of Schools. Failing in this, the appointment should be given to any other duly qualified physician having the approval of the Department.

By whom should he be appointed? Certainly not by virtue of his office as M.H.O., not by the municipal council, but by the School Board with such remuneration as will pay him for faithful and earnest service. Voluntary service rendered by local physicians has never been nor is it ever likely to be either lasting or satisfactory. As to his duties uniformity and efficiency would be best secured by the preparation and publication of a small Manual or Guide Book for Medical Inspectors. This Guide Book as well as Record Book and report cards with suggestions to parents could best be prepared by a committee appointed by the Department, consisting of, say one rural trustee, two P.S. Inspectors, two M.H.O.'s., having for their chairman such a man as Mr. Cowley who has both an intimate and first hand knowledge of rural school conditions and requirements and who has shown a practical initiative as evidenced by the success of our Continuation Schools.

Speaking generally, it would be the duty of the Medical Inspector to make one or more visits during the year, give a short and tactful address on the object of his visit and upon the far-reaching importance of good health, make a personal examination of each child, especially recording the condition of the skin, eyes, ears, teeth, tonsils, the presence of adenoids and any orthopedic defect or abnormal mental condition. To send report cards to parents or guardians where treatment is necessary, to examine, and report upon the sanitary condition of schoolhouse, outbuildings, and water supply.

From the trustees we would ask that a Medical Examiner, preferably the M.H.O. for reasons already referred to, be appointed and be paid a reasonable amount for each inspection. And we would ask them to use all influence to create and maintain a sympathetic interest among teachers, parents and children in this important but neglected branch of education.

The parents we would ask to believe that all this is being done in the interests of the children they love, and to have any defects or diseases pointed out to them, promptly treated by their family physician or dentist, or specialist. If, through lack of means they are not in a position to secure the necessary treatment that they immediately apply to the head of the municipality, whose duty it is to provide for treatment in such cases.

The children we would ask to believe that all this is being done not only for their present comfort but also for their future success and well being. We would ask them to take a pride in the care of their bodies in sound clean teeth and skin, and above all to avoid vicious habits, tobacco and every form of intemperance.

No mention is made of the school nurse. It is true that in the cities her services may be even more important than those of the physician, but in the country where the homes are far apart, and where the majority of the population is made up of that great independent middle-class, the need for a trained nurse does not appear to be very pressing at the present time.

Later when the Medical Inspection of all school children shall have been made compulsory by Provincial Legislation and shall have found favour with our people, no doubt a very useful sphere will be open to the School Nurse.

In conclusion, Gentlemen, let us consider some of the benefits that may be reasonably expected to result from such care of our school children. A campaign of practical education will be carried on, which will benefit not only this, but the coming generations also. Our greatest national asset will be developed and more fully enabled to discharge the duties of citizenship which they must later assume. Lives, time, and money, will be saved. Lives by removing the causes of fatal diseases. Time, by placing the child in that state of health and comfort in which an education can be acquired in ten years which under less favourable conditions would have required at least twelve or fourteen years. Money would be saved, because it costs less to educate a strong healthy child for ten years than a delicate one for twelve or fourteen.

Where the mentality of a child is considered, even when bodily defects are not present, many a bright child will, by special promotion be saved from loss of time and enforced idleness, while the dull and backward child will receive kind treatment, special help and consideration, instead of demoralizing corporal punishment and cruel taunts for failing to do the work and get the results which their natural mentality makes absolutely impossible.

A HARD LUCK TALE.

William Freeman Seems To Be Real Child of Misfortune

The accident which befell Mr. William Freeman, of Chesley, in Walkerton on Thursday afternoon, when after just getting out of the hospital here, where he had undergone a double operation for appendicitis and rupture, he was knocked off his feet in front of the Harley House by a dog running between his legs, and so badly shaken up that he had to be carried to Dr. Sinclair's office and later transferred to the hospital, recalls a long series of mishaps that have been shadowing his life and crossing his trail like a hoodoo, says the Walkerton Herald and Times.

His chapter of lamentations opened about four years ago while working on the railway, when he had his skull crushed and nine ribs broken by being thrown from a hand-car or jigger.

While recuperating from this he went to take in the London exhibition, and while standing in front of the station hotel a drunken carter drove up and threw a barrel of ale out of the brewery wagon onto the sidewalk where he was standing, breaking both his feet, and causing him to go to the hospital for thirteen months.

He had just been out of the hospital a short time after recuperating from this mishap, when he went up to Preston with the Galt band, and a row starting, someone threw a brick and dislocated his shoulder. After several weeks' enforced holidays he went back to work with his arm in a sling, and his hand being unsteady he got it in a boring machine that he was operating and had a hole drilled completely through it, tearing out the tendons and making an ugly wound.

Coming to Chesley he took sick and was sent to the Owen Sound hospital, where he remained until all his money was gone, after which he was returned home and later brought to a free ward in the Walkerton hospital where it was found he was suffering from rupture and appendicitis, and for which he was subsequently operated on by Dr. H. H. Sinclair.

The first day he was out of the hospital here the hard luck Nemesis pursued him again when a dog rushed between his legs and capsized him on the street, resulting in his return again to the hospital, where it was found that he was badly shaken up, but no stitches torn in his wounds as was feared.

The fact that he had been insured for sick benefits in a prominent fraternal society, and instead of drawing $8 a week as arranged got only sympathy from the order, shows that his financial troubles are in keeping with his physical misfortune.

LIQUOR AND EXPOSURE

Were Responsible for Death of John McLelland.

The Coroner's inquest upon the death of John McLelland, the East Garafraxa farmer, who was found dead on a sideroad in Eramosa township, was brought to a close on Saturday night. Full particulars of the finding of the body and of the experience of Sam Boyle, McLelland's companion, are given elsewhere in this issue. The Jury's verdict was "that John McLelland of East Garafraxa, County of Dufferin, who was found dead on a sideroad in Eramosa township on April 28th came to his death because of his previous diseased condition, liquor and exposure." McLelland left Fergus in company with Samuel Boyle on Saturday night, April 25th, and was not heard of again by his friends until he was found dead in a swamp near the village of Everton on the following Tuesday. The evidence at the inquest went to prove that the two men were on a big spree, and became lost while on the way home, going many miles out of their way.

Thomas McLelland, a brother of the deceased, who gained a good deal of notoriety some years ago because of his ill-treatment of his wife, went to Guelph on Saturday for the purpose of attending the inquest, but got drunk instead. He got into a quarrel, was arrested on a charge of assault and on Monday morning was brought before Magistrate Watt, who sentenced him to six months in the Central Prison.

JAMES WOOLNER KILLED

Collingwood Man Meets Death in Allandale Station Yard.

James Woolner, of Collingwood, was fatally injured in the G.T.R. yards at Allandale on Tuesday evening, April 21st. The injured man, who was in a dying condition when found, was taken to the R. V. Hospital in Barrie, where he died on Wednesday morning. Deceased, who was about 35 years of age, was a son of the late James Woolner, of Collingwood, and a nephew of William Woolner, of Glencross. He was a marine engineer, being in charge of the steamer Pelee, which left Collingwood on April 18th and arrived at Fort Gratiot near Windsor on the 19th. Woolner had wired his wife that he would be home on Tuesday evening and was on his way to Collingwood when he met his death. No person appears to have seen the accident, but the unfortunate man is supposed to have fallen from his train in some manner. He was severely injured about the head and Dr. Rose, who was one of the attending physicians at the hospital, attributed his death to shock and concussion of the brain. Woolner was about 35 years of age and leaves a wife and three small children.

A Coroner's inquest was held, the jury bringing in the following verdict:—

"That Jas. Woolner, while a passenger from Toronto on the evening of Tuesday, April 21st, 1914, on the G.T.R., either fell from or was thrown from said train in the yards at Allandale and received such injuries that he died on Wednesday morning at the R. V. Hospital."

Joseph Brown.

Joseph Brown, who was quite well-known in the Charleston neighborhood, died at Credit Forks on Friday aged 83 years. The funeral took place from the home of his daughter, Mrs. Jacob Rambo, to the cemetery on lot 20, 1st line, west, Caledon, on Sunday afternoon. Deceased was born in England, but had lived in Caledon the greater part of his life. He was married twice, but outlived both wives. Mr. Robert Brown, of Charleston, is a son.

Samuel Cobean Dead.

Mr. Samuel Cobean, a well-known resident of this district until a few years ago, died at his residence, 217 Perth Ave., Toronto, on Friday, May 1st, at the age of 52 years. Mr. Cobean was a son of the late John Cobean, who lived near Connor in Adjala township. He was in business at Mono Road for many years, moving from that place to Toronto. Deceased was one of a family of nine—four boys and five girls. The boys were Thomas, John, James and Samuel and the girls, Mrs. John White, Orangeville, Mrs. John Summerville, Hockley, Mrs. Adam Dunham, Everett, Mrs. Richard Lyness, Mono Mills, and Hannah, who died at an early age. The only surviving members are Mrs. White, this town, Mrs. Lyness, Mono Mills, and James in Toronto. The late Mr. Cobean was a Presbyterian, an Orangeman and a Mason. In politics he was a strong Conservative. There was a very large attendance at the funeral, which was held to the Union Cemetery at Caledon East on Monday after the arrival of the C.P.R. train from Toronto at Mono Road. Rev. Hugh Matheson and Rev. W. E. Wallace conducted the funeral service. The deceased was buried with Masonic honors, the impressive burial ritual of the Order being read over the open grave by Bro. Jas. R. Fallis, M.P.P. for Peel.

Mrs. Edgar Sanderson

Sorrow and sympathy were manifest on every hand last Friday, when it was learned that Mrs. Edgar Sanderson had passed away at her home on East Broadway. The end, which came quietly and peacefully, marked the close of a severe and well-nigh hopeless illness of over two weeks' duration. Everything that love, thoughtfulness and medical skill could suggest was done to save the life of the young wife and mother, but unfortunately human aid proved unavailing. Mrs. Sanderson, who was only 25 years of age, was a daughter of Mr. Daniel E. Taylor, of East Luther. She came to live in Orangeville shortly after her marriage to Mr. Sanderson three years ago last February and during her short residence here had endeared herself to many friends. Of a bright, cheery and hopeful disposition she was well fitted to win and hold friends and to be the chief ornament of the happy home in which she presided. She leaves her young husband, who is heartbroken over his great loss, and two little daughters, one about two years old and the other an infant of two weeks. It is unnecessary to say that profound sympathy is felt for the husband, children and other relatives in their bereavement. Her father, one brother, Stanley Taylor, and three married sisters, Mrs. John Hillis, Mrs. John Ewing and Mrs. Thos. East, also survive. There was an exceptionally large attendance at the funeral, which was held to Greenwood cemetery on Sunday afternoon. A great many relatives and neighbors were present from Grand Valley and vicinity, where the departed woman formerly lived. Rev. G. W. Robinson conducted impressive services at the house and grave. The pall-bearers were the brother, the three brothers-in-law, Thos. Bennett and Alex. Daigleish. The numerous beautiful floral offerings included a broken wheel from the husband, a Gates Ajar design from the Orangeville Fire Brigade, an anchor from the Adamson Hardware Co., a wreath from an uncle, Thos. Bennett, a pillow from Mrs. Sanderson's family, a crescent from the husband's family, a spray from Mrs. Snell and a spray from the Epworth League.

Lost Infant Child.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Bell, of Garafraxa, will have the sympathy of their many friends hereabouts in the death of their infant son, James Johnston. The little one passed away on Monday at the age of 1 month and 4 days. The remains were brought to the home of the grandparents, Rev. and Mrs. J. R. Bell, of Laurel, on Tuesday. The funeral was held yesterday afternoon, the interment taking place in Greenwood Cemetery.

Death of Mrs. Learn.

Mrs. D. B. Learn, of London, eldest daughter of Mr. Thos. Thompson, of Orangeville, died in the Victoria Hospital in the Forest City on Friday, April 24th, from heart and tubercular trouble. Deceased was 23 years of age and had only been married since last July. She is survived by her husband, father, a sister and one brother. Mr. Thompson went to London to attend the funeral, which was held on the following Sunday. The body was taken to Alvinston, where the remains were placed beside those of her mother. Mr. Thompson has the sympathy of his Orangeville friends in his bereavement.

McAllister-Reid.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dougal Reid, East Garafraxa, on Wednesday, April 29th, at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when his sister, Miss Flora Ann, became the bride of Mr. Malcolm McAllister, a well-known Erin township farmer. The ceremony took place in the parlor, the happy couple taking their places in front of a bank of flowers. The bride was given away by her brother, Dougal. Rev. Dr. Armstrong, of Alton, performed the ceremony in the presence of a number of the immediate friends of the bride and groom. The numerous wedding presents were a recognition of the high esteem in which the bride is held. After a short honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. McAlister will take up their residence on lot 25, 9th line, Erin, where they will be at home to their friends after June 1st.

Lamon-Belt.

St. George's Church, Oshawa, was the scene of a pretty but quiet wedding on Wednesday morning, April 22nd, when the marriage was solemnized of Ellen Madaline, eldest daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Reginald Belt, to Mr. Charles Albert Lamon, Manager of the Bank of Hamilton, Dundalk, the Rev. C. R. Depencier officiating. The bride, who was given away by her father, looked lovely in a gown of white satin and duchesse lace with bridal veil and orange blossoms. She was attended by her sister, Miss Alice Belt, who wore a pretty frock of pink mirror, with large picture hat and bouquet of pink roses. Mr. R. George Hanbury, of Dundalk, was best man, and the ushers were Mr. Harry Hyland and Mr. Reginald Belt. The wedding music was played by Miss Alma Frankish. After the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Lamon left on the afternoon train for New York and other American cities, the bride wearing a brown suit with hat to match.

Boy Scouts.

The Boy Scouts had a fishing expedition on Saturday last to the Nottawa, camping for the day with their tents near the old Wheelock dam. They decided to give their "catch" to the Lord Dufferin Hospital as their good turn for the day, and enjoyed the outing. At the start Allen Preston's side was out in the Tent Pitching Contest by one minute.

Boys! let's have a little less "talk" on the way home next time. Meeting on Friday night, Subject—Camp Cooking Talk, by Mrs. Tebbs.

The First Matinee.

The Orangeville Driving Club will hold the first matinee of the season on the Exhibition Grounds on Monday afternoon, May 25th. There are a number of speedy horses in town this year and several outsiders have intimated that they intend to enter their roadsters, so that a good afternoon's sport may be looked for.

Salvation Army.

The West Toronto Salvation Army Band of 25 pieces will visit Orangeville on Saturday and Sunday, May 16 and 17. A concert of instrumental music, song etc. will be given in the Opera House on Saturday night beginning at 8 o'clock. Mayor Island will preside and an admission fee of 10c. will be charged. At 3.30 p.m. on Sunday a musical concert will be given in the Opera House. C. R. McKeown M.P.P. will preside and will be supported by the local ministers. There will also be a musical service from 7.30 until 9 o'clock at night.

Bought Prize Hereford.

Mr. W. H. Hunter, The Maples, has purchased "Nora Fairfax," the second prize cow at the International Fair in Chicago from Col. D. McRae, of Kentland, Indiana. A brother of "Nora Fairfax" was sold for $10,000. Mr. Hunter's purchase means that the three best cows in America are now in the hands of Canadians. Mr. Clifford, of Oshawa, bought the first prize winner, Mr. Hunter the second and Mr. Chapman, of Calgary, the third prize animal. Mr. Hunter also bought a fine two year old heifer. The animals arrived here last week.

Disposed of Old Organ.

The present organ in St. Mark's Church has been disposed of to St. George's Church, Harriston, and will be transferred in time for the installation of the new organ in St. Mark's. A Committee from Harriston came to decide the matter on Monday, and were unanimous in their decision to purchase the instrument. An additional improvement has been made in the new organ to be installed by placing the console on the opposite side of the church to the instrument itself, enabling the organist to obtain the fullest benefit of the effects produced as well as being in close touch with the choir.

Filling Theatrical Engagements.

Mr. Arthur Huston has rented his farm at Melville to Mr. Sam Delaney again this year as Mr. and Mrs. Huston are away filling theatrical engagements in the larger cities on the United States side of the line. While playing Detroit recently they and Capt. Adams, of Orangeville, and Walter Huston, who came in from Chicago, spent the week together. Capt. Adams was responsible for a handsome bouquet of flowers, which Mrs. Huston received over the footlights one evening. They play Shea's theatre, Toronto, the week of June 8th and their steady bookings will not permit them to get home again this year.

Fell Two Stories.

To fall a distance of two stories from a perilous perch on the roof of a new building and yet to be able to pretty nearly tell his mother of his adventure was the experience of Eddie Wood, the five year old son of Mr. John Wood, a Brampton blacksmith. Eddie is what might be called a venturesome child and it was his ambition to climb to the roof of the new house, which is being erected by Mr. Jos. Foster in the vicinity of the Wood home. He got to the top alright, but becoming giddy fell from the roof to the cellar, a distance of two stories. Fortunately he landed on a pile of earth and escaped with very slight injury. The tendons of his neck were sprained, but otherwise he did not appear any the worse for his adventure.

Plant Chief's Close Call.

Mr. E. Schnurr, local Plant Chief of the Bell Telephone Co., had a narrow escape from a serious accident on Tuesday of this week. He and Mr. Rich. Robinson were replacing a broken pole on West Broadway just west of the town. Mr. Schnurr climbed to the top of the new pole in order to assist getting it properly placed. The pole took a sudden twist and thinking that it was falling Mr. Schnurr jumped across to the old pole, which had no support. Both pole and man came to the ground, the man underneath. Fortunately the cross-arms on the pole broke the weight of the fall and prevented serious injury. Although he fell a distance of 25 feet, Mr. Schnurr escaped without any injuries, except a few bruises and scratches.

Amendment to C. T. A.

Hon. Mr. Doherty has given notice of an amendment of the Canada Temperance or Scott Act. Under this Act, as it at present exists, it is necessary to vote on the Dominion election lists. The cost of preparing these in the unorganized districts is so great that they are dispensed with until just before a Dominion election. In certain places where an election under the Scott Act has been held it has been found necessary to prepare the lists for a whole Dominion riding at much expense and when not necessary for Dominion election purposes. The amendment proposed will provide that where an election under the Scott Act is to be held it shall be necessary only to prepare lists covering the district affected.

Mothers' Sunday.

As the second Sunday in May is the world's Mothers' Sunday, Rev. Mr. St. Dalmas will preach on Mother in the Baptist Church on Sunday morning. His evening subject will be Home. Seats free and strangers always welcome.

Dry in Three Months.

Peel County License Commissioners have given all hotelkeepers in the county three months in which to sell out or dispose of their business, if they desire to do so. Eight hotel and three Club licenses will be wiped out on August 1st.

Is God or Satan Winning?

Evangelist T. P. Yates, of Hamilton, will lecture on the above subject in the Opera House on Sunday, May 10th, at 3 p.m.

The lecture will be delivered under the auspices of the I.B.S.A.

The citizens of Orangeville and vicinity are cordially invited to attend this lecture. Seats free and no collection.

Rural Mail Routes

A statement handed out by the Post Office Department on May 1st shows that there are now in operation 2300 rural mail-delivery routes throughout Canada, serving 95,000 patrons. In Ontario during the past year 587 rural post-offices have been closed owing to the establishment of rural mail delivery. During April alone 46 post-offices were closed.

Where is the Gasoline?

It is said that a local dentist, who is an auto owner, got stalled somewhere on the Centre Road on Sunday afternoon. Lack of gasoline was the trouble and he phoned into town for a supply. While waiting for the juice that makes the wheels go round, he backed his machine into a sloping position and by so doing collected enough gasoline to make another start for home. He got to the bottom of the East Broadway hill, where he came to a standstill a second time. Meantime the gasoline dealers had taken advantage of a chance to send out the badly needed gasoline with a Streetsville auto that happened to be passing through town in that direction. The occupants were told that they would find the brother in distress about a mile down the Centre Road, and so drove quite innocently past his car, which had in the interval reached the foot of the Broadway hill. Under the circumstances it is not surprising that he did not get the gasoline, but maybe it came in handy for the other fellows.

Pleaded Guilty.

Stanley Child, the young Englishman, who was arrested by Chief Marshall last week on a charge of stealing a gold watch and rifle from his employer, Geo. Mackenzie, of Elba, was brought before P. M. Pattullo on Saturday. The young man pleaded guilty when arraigned and was committed for trial. He appeared before Judge Fisher on Tuesday, but sentence was deferred for a week largely at the instance of Rev. G. W. Tebbs. Childs has two sisters on the way out from England and it is thought they may take charge of him upon their arrival. He says he is a son of a sergeant in the 42nd Highlanders, the famous Black Watch Regiment. His father, according to the lad's story, was killed in South Africa during the Boer War.

Carried a Good Brand.

Monday a couple of swarthy looking foreigners spent the day in town canvassing for funds to aid a mission or hospital somewhere in Asia Minor. They had credentials from high church dignitaries and managed to collect considerable money from sympathetic townspeople. Near the Bank of Hamilton corner one of them took a handkerchief from his pocket and in doing so pulled out a small package which dropped to the sidewalk unnoticed. A citizen, who was standing nearby, got curious and upon investigating found that the stranger had dropped a packet of cigarettes. The "coffin nails" were of the well-known Hassan brand, cork tipped and we are told that after sampling them a local connoisseur pronounced them dandies. The Banner would be sorry indeed to say anything to discourage the support of any deserving cause either at home or abroad, but citizens would do well to be chary about handing out their good money to these foreign gentry. Two or three years ago a couple of foreigners picked up considerable money in town for the support of a hospital somewhere in Asia. A couple of weeks later they were exposed in Owen Sound and were glad to get out of that town by the first train.

—Norman Davies, a son of Rev. B. Davies, a former pastor of the Baptist church here, is among this year's graduates from McMaster University.

—St. Andrew's Young People held their usual weekly meeting on Monday night. Miss Sada McIntyre, who presided, gave a helpful address on Faith. The other numbers were a paper by Miss Browne on the Life of Dr. Robertson, the pioneer Western missionary, a piano solo by Miss Alberta Kearns and a piano duet by the Misses Donaldson.

—Mr. Bert Wheelock, son of County Treasurer C. R. Wheelock, has passed his second year examination in civil engineering in the Faculty of Science of the University of Toronto.

—Mr. Roy Keys, youngest son of the late Rev. Geo. Keys, of this town, has passed his third year examination in electrical engineering in the Faculty of Science, University of Toronto.

DIED IN A SWAMP

East Garafraxa Farmer's Lifeless Body Found on Farm Near Everton.

Remains Had Been Lying There Two or Three Days When Discovered.

John McLelland, whose home was on lot 4, concession 9, East Garafraxa, was found dead lying in a swamp about a mile from the village of Everton at 4.15 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, April 28th, by Mr. Hugh Eveleigh. The circumstances surrounding his death are very peculiar.

McLelland, who resides on the farm in East Garafraxa, but whose wife lives with her daughter, Mrs. James McDonald, of Fergus, is a well-known farmer in that part of the country.

The story, as near as can be learned, is to the effect that McLelland left home on Saturday morning with his horse and buggy to go to Fergus between seven and eight o'clock in the evening, ostensibly for home. He was accompanied by Samuel Boyle, a neighboring farmer, the two being very fast friends. It was Monday night before the latter reached home, and McLelland, as stated above was found dead in the Eramosa swamp.

Thos. McLelland, a brother of the dead man, stated that he thought his brother had gone down into Eramosa in order to sell a house which he had, this being the only reason he could give for him being in that neighborhood. He knew nothing more about the matter, further than the fact that Boyle was with him and that they left at the hour stated above.

Mr. Hugh Eveleigh told an interesting story in connection with the affair. He stated that he had been in attendance on Tuesday afternoon at the funeral of Mr. Nichol, in company with Mr. Wm. Tovell, a neighbor. They had heard some people talking about a horse attached to a buggy which had been seen near the gravel piton Mr. Ed. Alton's farm, and he decided to look into the matter a little bit and see if the owner could not be found, thinking perhaps that he might have been taken sick or something of that sort and fallen out of the buggy. He learned first of all that the rig had been seen by Mr. Len McIbougall above the gravel pit on Sunday afternoon but thinking that the owner was nearby paid no further attention to it.

On Tuesday afternoon Mr. Alton was around on his farm and he saw the horse still there, and it was with difficulty he succeeded in getting it from the position it was in above the gravel pit. It had become so hungry that it had eaten the fence rails. Mr. Eveleigh went along the side road after he got out of Mr. Tovell's buggy and searched through all the premises of Mr. James Lillies', which was vacant, but found no trace of anyone. He then went down towards the swamp, about 400 yards from where the horse was, and saw a man coming toward him. He thought it might be the owner of the rig, but it turned out to be Mr. Alton who was out on a search for the missing man, he having arrived at the conclusion that there must be something wrong or the horse would not have been there so long.

The two men agreed that they would continue the search together, and they had proceeded but a short distance when they saw the body, with the face looking very blue, due to the exposure. He was lying on one side with a log back of him on which he had evidently been sitting and fallen off. His head rested on his right arm.

Mr. Eveleigh and Mr. Alton searched the ground and discovered the dead man's pipe a few feet away. Pushed in between two little cedar bushes, was a three pint bottle half full of whiskey, corked tightly. Mr. Alton stayed with the body and Mr. Eveleigh went to his home and telephoned to Guelph, notifying first of all the Chief of Police, who in turn notified Coroner Dr. Orton and the county crown attorney. The coroner, accompanied by Constable Elliott, drove to the scene and the remains were removed to a shed, and later to the vacant house of Mr. Lillie, and placed in charge of Mr. Eveleigh.

By this time quite a number of the neighbors had gathered and there was no difficulty in securing a jury. It was composed of Messrs. Irwin Jackson, John Hendley, Wm. Dickieson, Barrie Mutrie, W. J. Smith, Henry Alton, John Gibson, Mr. Armstrong and James Weatherstone. They viewed the remains and adjourned until Saturday night, at 7 o'clock, at the residence of Mr. H. Evelyn.

It is the consensus of opinion that the two men, after leaving Fergus, took the wrong road and got lost. The first trace of them after leaving Fergus was when they were seen around what is known as the Four Corners. It was about 8.30 o'clock on Sunday morning when Mr. Zinger saw a horse and buggy in the road in front of his hotel. The man was apparently asleep and Mr. Zinger went out and roused him up, and asked him what he was doing there. "Go get me a straw hat," he said, but Mr. Zinger had no straw hat, and he gave him a cap, after which he drove on up the road. In about 15 to 20 minutes he came back again and Mr. Zinger's son went out and saw the man feeling around in the buggy as though looking for something. He gave the boy 10 cents and the horse was given a gallon of oats, and McLelland came in the hotel and was given some coffee and a lunch by Mrs. Zinger, but only ate part of it. He stayed there almost an hour and was told to get out. He drove off up the road, and that was the last he was seen by Mr. Zinger and his family. He was also seen by Mrs. Henry Sunley, who lives near Four Corners, but when she saw the rig there were two men in it. They drove up and down in front of her house.

Constable Pearen, of Rockwood, is also said to have seen the same rig near Rockwood during Sunday forenoon, but McLelland was alone at this time. The constable threatened to arrest him for being intoxicated in a local option district, but McLelland declared he was not drunk and nothing was done.

Colin McMillan, a farmer, saw him just after noon, above the hill, near the school, and McLelland asked to be directed on the road to Orton, and he was directed the right way to go.

W. J. Smith, the blacksmith at the Corners, saw him at 12.30 in front of his shop on Sunday. He pulled up and asked for some matches. Smith filled his pipe for him and they talked for awhile. Smith said the man was acting in a sort of muddled manner, and he thought he had had a couple of drinks. Mr. Smith thinks he was the last man to see him alive, but Mr. Eveleigh states that he saw him a few minutes later and noticed the big bay horse he was driving.

He drove slowly along the road and was recognized by Mrs. James Weatherstone as Mr. McLelland. Mr. Lawrence also saw him turn into the crossroad known as No. 15, a road which is only slightly travelled. This accounts for the horse being found in such an out of way place. It was seen by Mr. Wesley Lillie, but he didn't go near it, as he had often seen rigs there before.

The brother of the deceased man volunteered the information that he was a great sufferer from asthma, and ventured the opinion that death was due to choking. It is the opinion, however, of those who saw the remains, that it was due either to alcoholism, exposure, apoplexy or heartfailure. Deceased man was 56 years of age, and leaves to mourn his loss a wife and three children, Nelson, William and Mrs. James McDonald, of Fergus.

A peculiar thing in connection with the finding of the body is that nearly every one who saw it first declared most emphatically that it was Samuel Boyle, but, of course, they were mistaken. The men resemble each other only in very slight details.

Regarding Samuel Boyle, it might be stated that he is at his home, sound and well, but he also had quite an experience. Where the two men became separated is a mystery, but it is a fact that while McLelland was no doubt wandering around the roads with the horse and rig, Boyle was lying on the roadside not far from the Four Corners. He found his way late in the afternoon to the home of Thomas Scott, on the 2nd line, Eramosa. This was on Sunday. He went up to the house, and finding no one at home, went in and laid down on the sofa and went to sleep. Here he was found by Mr. Scott, who gave him his supper and kept him all night. Early on Monday morning he put in an appearance at Zinger's at the Corner, and asked what time Erin stage went to Guelph. He was told about 10 o'clock, but decided not to wait and walked off in the direction of the city. Whether he reached Guelph or not could not be learned, but the facts are that he arrived home safely, about 14 miles away, on Monday evening.

A matter that will bear some investigation is the matter of the bottle of whiskey found near the dead man. Where did it come from? It was half full, and if it was all the two men had when they left Fergus they could not have been very much under the influence of liquor, unless they were well loaded before they left Fergus.

The big bay Clydesdale horse, which was driven by McLelland, was in very bad shape when found by Mr. Alton, but after it had been properly fed and watered, began to get all right again. It is a four year old, and a valuable animal.

WONDERFUL WOOD.

There is Practically No Limit to the Life of Greenheart.

A most wonderful wood is that of the tropical tree called greenheart. The tree belongs to the laurel family and is exported mainly from the island of Trinidad and British Guiana. The wood is so nearly indestructible that no limit to its life is known. It is used chiefly in ship and dock building. The wood is proof against the white ant on land and the teredo in salt water. A United States government report says:

Greenheart has been known to stand in wharves for over thirty years, and logs that have remained under water for a hundred years are in perfectly sound condition.

Greenheart's extraordinary resistance to decay is probably owing to the presence of an alkaloid known as bibirine and also to certain resinous substances known as tyloses. The latter are reddish brown masses of living cells that grow in solid masses within little cavities that they often fill completely. As they grow with the tree they turn black and make the wood of the older trees black.

As in all tropical trees, whose growth is continuous through the year, there are no annual growth rings. The trees probably do not reach maturity under 250 years. A greenheart tree is from sixty to a hundred feet in height. It is an evergreen without knots and has a broad, open crown. The wood weighs about seventy-five pounds to the cubic foot and resists a crushing force of 12,000 pounds to the square inch.—Youth's Companion.

CANOPIES ON THEIR HEADS.

What would you think of a hat that was so large it would safely shelter your father, mother, sisters and yourself under it should a sudden rainstorm come up? The men of Korea like these enormous hats and would not feel properly dressed without them. These hats look like great flower pots set on a round table six feet across. The crowns are nine feet in height and three inches wide, much like a chimney on a one story house. How do you suppose these large, round head coverings are kept on? Under the brim is a small, closely fitting cap, held on by a padded string which ties under the ears. The material of these hats is bamboo, so finely split that it is like thread, and lastly they are varnished to keep out the sun and rain and the wind.

You know that the Korean people always wear cotton clothing, so these big hats protect them far more than our hats possibly could. In the rainy season cones of oiled paper are attached to the big bamboo head coverings in the shape of funnels, so, I suppose, that the rain pours off of them just as water does off a duck's back. A Korean keeps his hat on when we should take it off. Soldiers wear black or brown felt hats decorated with red horse hair or peacock feathers, and hanging from the sides, over the ears and around their necks are oval balls of porcelain, amber and a queer kind of gum.—Sunbeam.

The Ungrateful Cuckoo.

To hear the cuckoo's cheery note you might think he had the clearest conscience in the world. He can have neither memory nor moral sense or he would not carry it off so gayly. The most disreputable of birds, as a rule, are guilty of nothing worse than peccadillos. The jackdaw will steal for the mere fun of the thing, for he can make no possible use of plate or jewelry. Sparrows are, of course, notorious thieves, but they rank no higher in crime than the sneaking pickpockets. But the cuckoo, so to speak, is a murderer from his cradle. He violates the sanctity of a hospitable hearth. His first victims are his own foster brothers, and before he tries his wings on the first flight he is imbrued in fraternal blood, like any Amurath or Bajazet.—London Saturday Review.

POSTMISTRESS IS QUITE WELL AGAIN

Found Complete Cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Gray, Who was Nervous and Run Down for Two Years, Tells How She Found New Health.

Tichborne, Frontenac Co., Ont., May 4th (Special.)—Mrs. H. Gray, the popular postmistress here, is telling her friends of the great benefit she has received from taking Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"For about two years," Mrs. Gray says, "I was all run down. My sleep was broken and unrefreshing, and I suffered from shortness of breath and heart flutterings. I finally decided that the Kidneys were the cause of my trouble and decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I took four boxes in all, and I feel quite strong and like myself again. I certainly think Dodd's Kidney Pills are a good medicine."

The experience of the postmistress is similar to that of thousands of other Canadian women. They were weak, run down, nervous and in bad health generally. They took Dodd's Kidney Pills and are strong and well again.

The reason is that when the Kidneys get out of order they fail to strain the impurities out of the blood and general lassitude and weakness ensues. The natural cure is to cure the Kidneys. The experience of thousands of others tells you that Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys.

They came to him through his grandfather, Robert McCready, who was factor of the Carlyle estate in Scotland. A small cluster of feathers hangs in the centre which the slightest vibration of the scales will cause to flutter.

THE BANNER

THE BANNER, MAY 14th, 1914.

THE SUN AND BEST.

"Puddin'-head John Best, of Dufferin, should have walked out also, but didn't," is the way the Orangeville Sun speaks of John Best's failure to leave the Conservative caucus as a protest against the Borden Government's attitude toward the Canadian Northern's request for further financial assistance from the Canadian people. The public actions of a member of Parliament, or other public servant, are of course always open to criticism, but the public servant himself is surely entitled to ordinary courtesy and respect even when his deeds are under criticism. When The Sun calls Mr. Best "puddin'-head" it is endeavoring to ridicule and discredit the county's representative in the estimation of his constituents. In doing this our cotem has possibly overlooked the fact that it is at the same time casting a reflection upon the intelligence and good judgment of the Conservatives of Dufferin, who selected Mr. Best to go to Ottawa as their representative. Mr. Best was the nominee of a Convention composed of upwards of two hundred Conservatives from all parts of the county. If The Sun really thinks that our member is the "puddin'-head" that it says he is, what opinion can it have of the intellizence of the men who selected him for the important and responsible position which he fills?

After all is Mr. Best a man of the calibre that The Sun would like to make him appear? Dufferin's M. P. may not do as much speech-making in the House as some other members, but he can and does speak occasionally. What he has to say is usually practical, common-sense and reveals a thorough knowledge of the needs and conditions in rural Ontario constituencies such as Dufferin. He cannot be charged with any want of diligence in the performance of his duties. Constituents who have had occasion to write him on public matters have always had their letters answered promptly and courteously. He has invariably shown readiness to procure any information asked for if he could possibly do so. No person in the county has taken any greater interest in rural mail delivery and the mapping out of the rural routes, which now cover nearly every part of this county. Dufferin owes a great deal to Mr. Best in connection with the early introduction of the boon of rural mail delivery. Our member at Ottawa was also instrumental in securing the appropriation for the new post-office building in Shelburne. He has also been the means of having an item of $9000 placed in this year's supplementary estimates for a post office clock and a badly needed addition to the Orangeville post office, which has become altogether too small for the proper handling of the heavy mail that is received and distributed here since the organization of the rural delivery system.

The Banner does not hold any brief for the member for Dufferin. He has his faults and short-comings as well as other people. What this journal does object to is the practice of attempting to belittle and deride public men, who are in most instances making an honest effort to discharge their duties and live up to their responsibility to the people whom they represent.

Alcohol and Efficiency.

To the Editor —

Does anyone doubt the impairment of efficiency by alcohol? The Christian Guardian publishes these statements:—

"It is a very old delusion that alcohol adds energy, and although today the delusion is less tenable than ever, it seems hard to kill. And yet every new scientific study of alcohol helps to demonstrate more conclusively than ever that alcohol is a foe to work. Professor Emil Krapelin, of Munich University, has been making some remarkable experiments in this direction, using the ergograph. He first took a total abstainer and measured his muscular efficiency ten times a day for some weeks. He then gave the man a glass of Bordeaux wine after each meal and proceeded with his measurements. In every case the worker showed a decline in efficiency varying between 6, 7 and 8 per cent. After experimenting with a number of Germans the Professor tried the same experiment with men of other races and under different climatic conditions with practically the same results.

"He then proceeded to experiment as to the effect of alcohol upon the mental powers. He tested the ability of some accountants to add long columns of figures. They first worked without alcohol, and then each was given four cupfuls of claret a day. On the very first day their work fell off 3.1 per cent. and it steadily declined until at the end of two weeks the loss was 15.3 per cent. in daily efficiency. His next experiment was with printers' compositors, and one week of alcohol lessened their speed 9.6 per cent.

"In all these cases there was no evidence of intoxication, and doubtless each man would have denied that his working efficiency was impaired in the slighest degree, but the tests showed otherwise."

It is now pretty generally known that alcoholic liquors, even in moderation lessen muscular and mental power, and a young man seeking a position is usually asked two questions "Do you drink?" "Do you smoke?"

CONFIRMATION SERVICE.

Bishop of Niagara Addressed Large Congregation in St. Mark's.

His Lordship Emphasized Importance of Prayer, Daily Bible Reading and Regular Church Attendance.

His Lordship, Dr. Wm. Clarke, Bishop of Niagara, confirmed a large class of candidates in St. Mark's Church on Sunday morning. The presence of the Bishop and interest in the confirmation brought together a congregation that filled the edifice to the doors. His Lordship delivered an impressive sermon, directing his remarks primarily to the new communicants. The following is a verbatim report of portions of his discourse:—

"It gives me a great deal of pleasure to be here amongst you once more. I want to congratulate the rector on the splendid classes that he has presented to me within the past eight months. This is my second visit to this parish within that time and, I can assure you that I deem there is no better evidence that any clergyman can show his Bishop, of faithfulness and devotion to his work, than a large class, well prepared for confirmation.

"In these restless days, when people are fighting between two opinions, divided between the world and Jesus Christ, it is a great joy, my dear young friends, to see you coming here this morning and taking your stand on the Lord's side. It is always interesting to witness a baptism; to see a pair dedicated and united to God before any other step in life is taken, but more impressive, still, is it to see that person, on coming to years of understanding, after serious thought and earnest prayer and deep heart searching, standing up in the presence of the living God and, in the presence of the clergyman and congregation and saying, in effect, "I have learned a great many things. I know I have a great deal to learn, but I promise this day and from this day on, God helping me, to live a Christian life, to believe in God and to serve Him. It is a great thing to have the mind fixed on spiritual things and the heart given to God at the threshold of that age when moral responsibilities are being felt and when temptations of all kinds are crowding in on mind and heart. This is one side of confirmation and a very important side it is, but it is not the only side.

"You have come here this morning of your own free will and accord, and you have stood up here and confessed Christ before men. While the congregation has united in prayer to the living God on your behalf, you have been praying most earnestly for yourselves, for your own spiritual life. That God may give you grace and strength to enable you to keep the promises and vows that you have renewed, is the prayer of the clergy for you, and we all know, dear brethren, the need of prayer.

"Our blessed Master said when He was upon earth, 'If ye as anything in my name, I will give it you.' 'All things,' He said, 'whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall see.' St. James tells us the prayers of a righteous man availeth much. What then must be the joy and the influence and the effect of the prayers of the whole congregation, clergy and laity, of God the Father and God the Son on behalf of those who have openly confessed Him? And in the third place it is the occasion when the chief pastor of the Church, after the example of the Holy Apostles, and according to the customs of the Church all down the centuries, laying his hand upon each candidate, invokes the spirit of the living God. This is one of the oldest customs in the world. We read of it in the Book of Genesis, when Jacob, an old man lying upon, what he thought to be his death-bed, sent for his two grand-children, sons of Joseph, laid his hands on them and blessed them. We read how the blessed Saviour took little children up in His arms and laid His hands on them and blessed them. We read in this morning's service about the first confirmation which took place in Samaria. Philip, who was only a deacon in the Church, one of seven deacons, went into the city of Samaria and there preached Christ and the resurrection to them and they with one accord gave heed to Philip praying and acknowledging Jesus to be their Saviour, baptizing them both men and women. Read the 8th Chapter of Acts of the Apostles, which gives a concise account of this. Then in the 19th Chap. of the Acts of the Apostles, we read how St. Paul went into the city of Ephesus and did the same thing. We read in the 6th Chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to Hebrews the six foundation principles of the Christian Church and amongst them we find Baptism and the laying on of hands. What is in that passage alone is sufficient to prove confirmation to be of apostolic origin and all down through the centuries from that day to this, in any age and in every land, we have confirmation following Holy Baptism. This morning, in answer to prayer and the laying on of hands, God the Holy Ghost, the third Person of the Trinity, came down from the Father and the Son into every heart prepared to receive Him, and here work for Him. What will be His work? And who is the Holy Ghost? He is the Third Person of the Trinity, Father, Son and Holy Ghost. The Father, who made us, the Son, who redeemed us, the Holy Ghost, who sanctifieth us, maketh us strong, maketh us holy, filleth us with holy thoughts and holy desires. He it is who comes to you this morning to fill your minds and souls, to enable you to love anything that is good and beautiful and true and pure, and to hate everything bad and untrue and impure. He has given you greater strength and power to go forth to meet the temptations of the world, the flesh and the devil. You have received this morning the greatest gift you can possibly receive in this world, greater than gold, greater than riches, greater than precious jewels. May you ever uphold that precious gift. May you ever look back to this morning and to this service as the most precious one in all your life.

"A young man came to me the other day and said to me, 'Bishop, what can you do for me?' It is the cry of hundreds and thousands of our young men and women to-day in our big cities, who have come from their own countries and other lands, and are strangers in strange cities. It is the problem of the Church and the greatest problem it has. What was my answer? My young man, have you been confirmed? Yes. Have you been a Communicant? Yes. I am astonished at you to come here and speak to me like that. Do you not know you are a soldier of the cross? Do you not know that you are a pledged worker for your Lord and Saviour? Go and make yourself known at once to your clergyman. Tell him your temptations, your sorrows; bring everyone with whom you come in contact to your Church and to the Lord's Table. The day you were confirmed you stood up in God's presence and declared that as long as life lasted, God being your helper, you would fight manfully against the world, sin and the devil, and now you are a weakling, going back on your promise. Brace yourself. Go to Christ in prayer; ask Him to give you strength and go forth and do the work for your Master.'

"That, my dear friends, I want to say to you each this morning. You are now soldiers of the Cross, fully equipped and ordained for service for your Master. Never be a traitor; never fall back on His Church. Stand up for Him; speak for Him; be true to Him and live a life of service in winning others. That is your work from this day forth. I know you will go out from this church to-day and you will have many temptations. I know you will come against men and women, people of the world. You come across one who will tell you he takes no stock in confirmation. He does not believe in prayer, and says there is no God. There are lots of those people. They can get on, possibly, very well in this world for a short time but, I have been at bedsides of people like that and have heard their moanings, prayers and pleadings and repentance. They are living now in Christian atmosphere; living in a land in Christian climes and do not see it. They are living in a land ruled over by our Maker and do not see or believe it. The world, and the devil have got such a grasp on their minds and hearts, they think of only the pleasures they can get in life. Then there are those who will do their best to lead you away from the House of God, lead you away from the Lord's Table; sneer at prayer; make light of prayer. You be true; stand firm; look to Christ; trust Him and all will be well. Your own bodies will be a trial of temptation to you. What did St. Paul say. He says the flesh warrth against the spirit and the spirit warrth against the flesh and these are contrary one to the other. I want you to remember this morning that your bodies have become the tabernacle of God. Why? Because it has been offered to God. It has been dedicated to God and God has taken possession. We, therefore have entertainments and concerts and amusements in our homes and Town Halls that we would not dream of having in that place. Because it is God's House it must not be profaned. Nothing that would defile it must take place. Just so it is with your own bodies, a tabernacle of the Holy Spirit a little church so to speak offered to God this morning. You must never, then, do anything unclean; no unholy thoughts must be harbored in your minds; no low, filthy books must ever be taken in your hands if you know them to be such. You must avoid impure company. You must avoid places where low people congregate. You must keep your body pure and sacred, because it is God's Temple, God's dwelling place. God has taken possession and He will influence and control and direct your whole being if you are guided by Him.

After an earnest exhortation to prayer and Bible reading as a means to growth in God's holy spirit, His Lordship continued:—"Now, you have an opportunity of coming to God's Table. Remember that as soon as you cease desiring to come to the Lord's Table; as soon as you cease hungering and thirsting for that holy, precious food, there is something wrong in the heart and in the soul. Before you come take your prayer book and read over the commandments and the Communion Service. Read every commandment; ask God to tell you how you broke them, where you broke them and ask Him to forgive you and incline your heart to keep His law. If you do that each time, going over the Communion Service very carefully, you will always come desiring to come to the Lord's Table. This is the way you may grow in grace by daily reading God's word, attending regularly church service in God's House and faithfully on the Lord's Day, thus, growing in grace and knowledge of the Lord.

"One word more and I am done. I want you to be useful Christians, useful church people. I want you to be something more than mere negative Christians. A great many people will tell you, 'I have done no wrong.' 'I have never injured a neighbour.' 'I have paid my debts and am not a bad sort,'—negative Christians. They have not done so and so, but what have they done? Let us have something positive, something more than mere indifferent, luke-warm Christians.

"We talk of the high cost of living. Very little we know of the problems that face the humble life in the cities. Then, there are those people, who get the get-rich-quick grasp, the pleasure grasp, and the gambling grasp, and when these seize the heart and head, they become so wicked and so indifferent and so luke-warm that they do not know God or His Church. Then there are those who try to serve two Masters, God and the World. One hour in church, the rest motoring, or pleasure, or newspaper reading—one hour for Church and God. Six days in the week, the world, business, pleasure, no prayer in the morning;—no prayer at night and yet want to be called Christians, church workers. What does God think of that? Yet do these not stand up every Sunday and say "I believe in God the Father, Almighty, Maker of Heaven and earth. I believe in Jesus Christ, who came to this world and died for my sake." Oh, brethren, think of these things; pray over these things and ask to-day, before you leave this church, what is my life work. Our Lord went about every day doing good. The poor came to Him, the rich came to Him, the weak, the blind, the outcast came to Him and not one ever came in vain. Oh, how many are like the poor, old woman on her death-bed, when she said to her clergyman, 'I am not afraid to die, because I believe in Jesus, but I am ashamed to die because I have done so little for Him. I have worked for myself, all myself, and none besides, just as if Jesus had never lived, had never died.'

"God grant that these few, poor, weak words of mine spoken to you in all earnestness and simplicity this morning may approach and possess of God's Holy Spirit that which will sink deeply into our hearts and bring forth fruit in our lives unto life eternal."

CROWN ATTORNEY RESIGNS.

W. J. L. McKay Steps Down and Out.

Mayor Island has been Recommended for Vacant Position.

Mr. W. J. L. McKay has resigned the position of Crown Attorney for the County of Dufferin. The letter resigning the office was forwarded to Attorney-General J. J. Foy last week. Formal action has not been taken regarding the resignation but it is generally understood that it will be accepted and that Mr. McKay's successor will be appointed forthwith. Mayor Island has made an application for the position and we understand that C. R. McKeown M.P.P. has recommended that he receive the appointment. If Mr. Island is appointed he will be obliged to resign the Mayoralty so that Orangeville will likely have a municipal election in June. Dr. Campbell, who was defeated by the present Mayor a year ago last January, and Mr. J. J. White, the present reeve, are the aspirants for the office. If both gentlemen stand they will make an exciting contest. In case White goes after the Mayoralty it is likely that Walter Fairbairn will enter the lists for the reeveship.

W. J. L. McKay, whose resignation is now in the hands of the Attorney-General, graduated in law in 1890, after spending his student days in the offices of W. L. Walsh, of Orangeville, now Judge Walsh, of the Alberta High Court, Police Magistrate Jos Pattullo and T. H. Bull, of Toronto, late Clerk of the Peace for York County. Mr. McKay received the appointment of Crown Attorney from the Mowat Government in 1892, succeeding the late Elgin Myers, K. C., who was removed from office because of his advocacy of commercial union. At the time of his appointment Mr. McKay had the distinction of being the youngest Crown Attorney in the Province and was probably the youngest lawyer ever appointed to that position in Ontario. Mr. McKay, The Banner understands, intends to engage in the general practice of law in Toronto and will move to the city in July.

W. C. T. U. Notes.

The March meeting was public. Mrs. Cooke, County President for Grey and Dufferin, was present and gave an address on the work of the Society. Miss McLeod, Provincial Field Worker among children and young people, spoke of the effects of alcohol and tobacco on the heart and physical condition of the body. She also addressed the children in the public schools.

The topic at the April meeting was Frances Willard. Mrs. St. Palmas read a manuscript written by herself on the life of that sainted woman. The Paper was especially interesting. The Union agreed to make three or more quilts for the Willard Home for Girls in Toronto.

$10 was voted to be sent away for missions. A committee was appointed to buy dishes, cutlery and a tray for the W.C.T.U. ward in the Hospital.

The May meeting will be held in the Baptist Church on the fourth Thursday of the month and as this will be the annual meeting the business will include the election of officers and the appointment of a delegate to the District meeting in Owen Sound in June. A good attendance is desired.

Dodds-Rutherford

The marriage took place in the Methodist Church, Bolton, on May 6th, of Miss Laura Isabel, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Rutherford, to Mr. Wilfrid A. Dodds, youngest son of Mr. Albert Dodds, of Barrie, formerly of Bolton. Rev. A. Newton St. John officiated. The bride, given away by her father, wore her travelling suit. The wedding march from Lohengrin was played by Miss Jessie Cassidy, Fergus, cousin of the bride, and after the ceremony the guests, close relations and friends, partook of breakfast at the bride's home, which was prettily decorated. Mr. and Mrs. Dodds have gone to Syracuse, N.Y., to make their home.

Appeal Dismissed.

Judge Fisher has dismissed the appeal of Wm. Harper, a Grand Valley hotelkeeper, from the conviction by Police Magistrate T. C. Hamilton and Mr. Stewart Tate J.P. The magistrates fined Harper $50 and costs for selling liquor after hours. The defendant appealed and succeeded in securing a retrial of the case.

The judgment dismissing the appeal is in the following terms:— "Outside of the technical objections raised by counsel for the appellant, I find the Justices were justified in finding the defendant guilty as charged, upon the evidence. I also find against the appellant upon the technical objection raised as to the constitutionality of the Court to try this action. Section 19, Chapter 88, R.S.O. 1914 in my opinion disposes of this objection. I am not disposed to allow costs on the appeal for the reason that the Crown should have taken some precaution to secure the evidence of the unknown party referred to in the evidence and which, if secured, would in all probability have left no reasonable ground for an appeal. I therefore direct that a judgment be entered dismissing the appeal without costs."

Owen Sound Y.M.C.A. bowlers presented Mr. L. H. Wing, who has resigned the position of secretary after four years service, with an address and a beautiful gold headed, initialled cane.

AID FOR THE FIELD LABORER

What Denmark Does.

Government Loans to Good Citizens for Small Agricultural Holdings.

Denmark is one of the countries in which agriculture is most prosperous, and its institutions are often referred to as models of their kind. An article, dealing with the measures taken by the Danish Government for the encouragement of home colonization, appears in the January number of the Monthly Bulletin of Economic and Social Intelligence, published by the International Institute of Agriculture. It says:

The first act for the creation of agricultural laborers' holdings in Denmark dates from 1899. This act was of a tentative nature only, and provision was made for its revision every five years so that its text will be revised again within the next few months.

An applicant for a small holding must be a Dane between the ages of 25 and 50, must not have been condemned by the courts for an act dishonoring him in public opinion and not have been in receipt of relief out of the public rates. He must also have been engaged in agricultural labor for at least four years since the completion of his eighteenth year, and be incapable of attaining the position of a land-owner by means of his own resources, but possess the tenth part of the value of the holding applied for.

The holdings cannot be less than one hectare in area, but as a rule may not exceed 6.500 crowns in value—the crown is equal to 1 fr. 39—and, in exceptional cases 8,000 crowns, including the value of the building, live stock and furniture. Finally, each individual can only obtain a loan for a single holding.

The total number of holdings created between 1901 and 1911 was 5,777 and the treasury loans amounted to 25,410,148 crowns. The number of applications, small at first, increases yearly, the applicants being for the most part either married or about to marry.

The returns as to the number of head of live stock (including poultry) owned by the State-aided farmers are important, as they enable us to appreciate the economic situation of such peasant farmers. The available returns refer to the live stock owned by 5,374 farmers on April 1st, 1911. At that date their farms supported 5,187 horses, 22,079 head of horned cattle, 33,626 pigs, 1,156 sheep, and 155,250 fowl. These figures represent an average per farm of 1 horse, 4.1 head of horned cattle, 6.3 pigs, 0.2 sheep and 29 fowl.

Comparing these figures with those of the previous statistical return, we find that, except in the case of sheep, the number of head of live stock per farm has considerably increased in the space of five years. It seems that the immediate anxiety of the farmers from the moment of their taking possession, is at once to have a sufficient number of cattle. Only afterwards do they concern themselves about acquiring horses, but the increase in the number of the latter has been far more rapid.

Of 5,149 farmers, 4,689 or 91 per cent. were members of co-operative dairies; 2,880 or 56 per cent., of co-operative slaughter houses; 1023 or 20 per cent., of co-operative societies for the sale of eggs; 94 or 1.8 per cent., of live stock improvement syndicates. These figures, of which the first two exceed the average for farmers of farms of the same area by 6 and 16 respectively, show the great importance of co-operation for the peasant farmer.

They Watched It Grow.

One characteristic of the writings of the pioneers of Canada deserves mention, as it is a characteristic of the whole of Canadian literature. It is healthy and vigorous in tone, and full of the hopes and aspirations of a country that was opening up before their own eyes, and by their own efforts.

We breathe the invigorating spirit of the wild that is still so marked a feature of the literature of the Dominion.

One never forgets, writes Robert Birkmyre, in a recent issue of The Milgate Monthly, that they are the impressions of men who saw things as they were, and in spite of the fact that there is a crudeness in their work, and it is occasionally monotonous in detail, there is a sort of consecutive interest in the journals and diaries of the pioneers that make them free from the reproach of dullness.

For example, we find in the journal of Alexander Henry, a record of personal adventure that almost makes the pages of Fenimore Cooper seem dull in comparison. It is to the literature of the pioneers more than to any other source that romantic writers such as Sir Gilbert Parker are indebted for most of their material and inspiration in dealing with the exploits of the voyageur and the fur trader; and there is still hidden away in these obscure chronicles a veritable storehouse of romance for the prospective novelist who wishes to take up the early romance of the Dominion.

Brant Never a Chief.

This year is the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the treaty of the alliance with the ancient confederacy of the Five Nation Indians, since then changed to the Six Nations. A common error is committed almost daily by citizens and press in referring to Joseph Brant as "Chief" Brant. Major Gordon J. Smith, Indian Agent, states that Brant was never a chief and was never so called by the Indians. He was Captain Joseph Brant, and not Chief. His son, however, John Brant, was made a chief.

LAUREL.

Where is our Laurel Bumble Bee,
He should be writing poetry,
And tell in simple little rhyme
About the housewife's busy time.

We were surprised one night last week
To hear a sound, then see a streak
A motor cycle! How it did go!
At the corner, the lads cried "Hang on Joe."

Another exciting event took place
When Billy's and Herb's team had a race,
The judge declared the horses beat
But Bill came in on second heat.

Two citizens of fair renown,
Went westward to a little town,
And homeward came with downcast mien,
Because their sweethearts they had not seen.

Now busy, busy Bumble Bee,
We like to read your poetry,
If help you need just raise the cry,
And I for one, will soon apply.

Mothers' Day was duly observed in town last Sunday. White roses for mothers dead and red ones for those living were everywhere in evidence, while thoughts were turned to the great debt due to mothers and their self-sacrificing devotion. Rev. STAGELAND IN NEW YORK.

One Spot on Broadway the Mecca of All the Actor Folks.

New York to an actor means Broadway and Forty second street always. There is no place in America like it—perhaps not in the world. Set in the midst of a city, the theatrical district is a city in itself, with denizens, customs and even a language peculiarly its own. Its frontiers shift, to be sure, and they are invisible, but they are as real and definite as stone walls could make them. A block too far in any direction and you are in the realms of business, society or boarding houses, but across the unseen boundary line and presto! you are in actor land.

Crowds of carefully dressed people saunter up and down, stopping half a dozen times in each block to gossip or exchange enthusiastic greetings. The men are clean shaven, with hard, sharp cut faces, which somehow look unfinished without makeup. The women are consciously striking, whether they are pretty or not, and their clothes show absolute genius for accenting every prettiness they have. All of them emphasize their individuality. They have a constant air of feeling themselves observed and wishing to leave a lasting impression. An outsider—or "nonprofessional"—looks oddly neutral and ineffective beside them, like a man in ordinary street attire on a stage.

After all, it is more of a village than a city. Everybody knows everybody else, personally, by reputation or through mutual friends. It is a close knit fraternity, this order of grease paint, and beneath all the rivalry and envy and insincerity there is a warm and vital bond of comradeship.—From "Anne, Actress," by Juliet G. Sager.

Freak Societies.

Germany is said to hold the record for societies with extraordinary objects. One of these is entitled "Society For Promoting Good Manners Among the Poor," while another unites in the bonds of fellowship all Germans wearing pointed beards. A curious association is that of ex-lunatics, detention for six months in an asylum being the qualification for membership. As illustrating the craze for associations in Germany it may be mentioned that in the little town of Wildau, with only 2,000 inhabitants, there are twenty two societies.—London Standard.

Constant Headaches From Exhausted Nerves

Appetite Poor—Digestion Bad—Daily Grew Weaker—Lost Faith in Medicine

Headache is a symptom and not a disease in itself. True, relief may be obtained by the use of powerful opiates but the shock to the nerves is tremendous and the result a further weakening of the system.

To really cure headache it is absolutely necessary that the exhausted nerves be restored and revitalized. This can best be accomplished by the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. The benefits are both certain and lasting, for by building up the system the cause of trouble is removed.

This has been proven in many thousands of cases and we cannot do better than quote here the letter from Mr. Donneral, who suffered almost constantly from headaches for two years. Doctors did their best to cure him but in vain. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food made a perfect cure because it removed the cause.

Mr. Charles Donneral, Kleinburg, Ont., writes:—"I wish to communicate to you the great cure which I have received from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I was a sufferer from headaches for over two years. I took medicines from physicians and yet the headaches persisted and I was rarely free from them. About a year ago, I saw one of Dr. Chase's Medicine Books, and I thought I would try his Nerve Food. I did so, and I must confess with very little faith, but after I had taken a box, my headaches were easier, and after I had taken two boxes they left me. My appetite was always poor and my stomach was bad, and now my appetite is splendid and my digestion is excellent. I had become thin and weak from the constant headaches, but now not only have I been cured of all them, but my strength is growing once more, and I feel like a new man. I am exceedingly grateful to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food for curing me. I give this testimonial with great pleasure as I hope thereby some other sufferer from headaches will be induced to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and will be cured."

OLD MAIDS.

All girls should marry when they can. There's naught more useful than a man. A husband has some faults, no doubt, and yet he's good to have about; and she who doesn't get a mate will wish she had one, soon or late. That girl is off her base, I fear, who plans to have a high career, who sidesteps vows and wedding rings to follow after abstract things. I know so many ancient maids who in professions, arts, or trades have tried to cut a manlike swath, and old age finds them in the broth. A loneliness, as of the tomb, enshrouds the spinsters in its gloom; the jim crow honors they have won they'll sell at seven cents a ton. Their sun is sinking in the West, and they, unloved and unearessed, must envy, as they bleakly roam, the girl with husband, hearth, and home. Get married, then, Jemima dear; don't fiddle with a cheap career. Select a man who's true and good, whose head is not composed of wood, a man who's sound in wind and limb, then round him up and marry him. Oh, rush him to the altar rail, nor heed his protest or his wail. "This is," you'll say, when he's been won, "the best day's work I've ever done."

PASSING IT ON.

A Sunday School teacher, after conducting a lesson on the story of Jacob's Ladder, concluded by saying: "Now is there any little girl or boy who would like to ask a question about the lesson?"

"A question, Susie?" asked the teacher.

"I would like to know," said Susie, "if the angels have wings, why did they have to climb up the ladder?"

The teacher thought for some moments, and then, looking about the class, asked: "Is there any little boy who would like to answer Susie's question?"—Everybody's Magazine.

Mr. Weber & Sons, of the Valley, received this week five thousand seedling trees from the government nursery, which he is planting on a bush lot in the valley recently purchased by him. These consist of 1000 white pine, 1000 red pine, 1000 Scotch pine, 1000 black walnut and 1000 black locust. Most of us old fellows will not see the harvest that will be reaped in future years, but if these do well each year will see the property become more valuable instead of depreciating. We are of the opinion, however, that planting the maple would bring quicker returns. It takes a generation for evergreens to become marketable.—Flesherton Advance.

ERECTING TABLETS.

Nova Scotia Historical Society Preserves Records of the Past.

"A wise nation," said Joseph Howe, "preserves its records, gathers up its muniments, decorates the tombs of its illustrious dead, repairs its great structures, and fosters national pride and love of country by perpetual references to the sacrifices and glories of the past."

As far as its means permit, the Nova Scotia Historical Society is doing for its province the work Howe so highly valued—doing it not only for the people of Nova Scotia, but for the people of Canada, because much that their collections contain rise to the level of national interest. The scope of this volume of collections and the value of the work carried on by the society can be indicated by a few gleanings from the volume, which will also be interesting reminders of important chapters in the history of the province that was the first to fly the British flag, and that led the way in the matter of representative institutions.

The past year has been especially fruitful in regard to the placing of historical tablets. The society marked historic sites in six counties of the province.

One table was to mark the birthplace of Joseph Howe and was erected on the gatepost of "Emscote," on the Northwest Arm, Halifax Harbor, now the residence of the Hon. B. F. Pearson.

On this spot Howe first saw the light of day, and from this home he used to walk into the town to attend school. The inscription on the tablet speaks of Howe "as Nova Scotia's leader in obtaining responsible government"—the work that ensures the name of Howe a permanent place in the history of his province. That humble home was Howe's birthplace. It was in Government House, across the Arm in the city, that the life of the Tribune of the people came to an end almost seventy years later.

Another notable tablet is that placed at 173 Grafton street, Halifax, to commemorate the establishment of the first printing press in Canada and the place of publication of the first newspaper in the Dominion.

The tablet bears this inscription—"The site of the first printing press in Canada, established by Bartholomew Green, Jr., 1751; and of John Bushell's press, where the Halifax Gazette, the first newspaper in Canada was published, 1752."

The site of the first Court House in Halifax, erected about the year 1754, has also been marked. The building that once stood on this site was not only the first Court House but it was also the meeting place of the first Legislature which convened in this building on Oct. 7, 1758—the year in which Louisbourg was taken, and a little less than a year before the fall of Quebec.

The work of the Nova Scotia Historical Society has not been confined to the provincial capital. The towns and villages have not been forgotten, for here and there remembrances have been erected to the memories of men who had a hand in the making of Nova Scotia, or who went from Nova Scotia to assist in the making of other parts of Canada. For instance, in Windsor there is a tablet marking the residence of Judge Haliburton, "the Creator of 'Sam Slick,' historian, jurist, legislator."

In Annapolis Royal, the spot where Champlain founded a settlement four years before he was at Quebec, there is a tablet announcing that it marks the birthplace of a soldier who left his mark upon the history of his time. That man was Sir Fenwick Williams, the hero of Kars in the Crimean War.

A Hybrid Fish.

For some years several very interesting specimens of trout have been taken in the lakes that are found in the boundaries of Algonquin Provincial (Ontario) Park.

During the year 1913 specimens were brought in from Delano Lake, which resembled both the salmon and the speckled trout, so much so that the superintendent of the park sent one of the specimens to Prof. Prince of the Fisheries Department, Ottawa, who is probably the best authority on fish culture in America. Prof. Prince's report on this specimen is most interesting.

"The specimen of peculiar trout have been carefully examined," he says, "and it really appears to be a hybrid, namely, the brook trout and the gray trout (or lake trout). The dental features and the nature of the vomer, as well as the peculiar color and the shape of the tail, all indicate a combination of the two species, as is well known, are now separated further than they used to be. A hybrid specially connected with two separate genera is a remarkable and exceedingly interesting occurrence."

An effort will be made to see if the hybrids can be produced artificially.

Two Are Canadians.

Lady Mount Royal and Strathcona, as the daughter of the late Lord Strathcona, will be styled by virtue of the second creation under which she succeeds, is the seventeenth peeress of the United Kingdom in her own right in addition to three lady holders of Scottish titles. Strangely enough, two of the seventeen imperial peeress are of Canadian origin. The other is Lady Macdonald of Earnscliffe, one of the oldest members of the group. Lady Macdonald is the holder of the only new creation since the death of Viscountess Hambledon. She is the widow of Sir John Macdonald.

Sponges as Drugs.

Sponges are classed by Canadian customs authorities with drugs, dyes, chemicals, and patent medicines. The total value, however, of this class of imports in Quebec is given as $29,158 for 1911 and $10,905 for 1912.

MOTHER OF SCHOOL GIRL

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Daughter's Health.

Plover, Iowa.—"From a small child my 13 year old daughter had female weakness. I spoke to three doctors about it and they did not help her any. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had been of great benefit to me, so I decided to have her give it a trial. She has taken five bottles of the Vegetable Compound according to directions on the bottle and she is cured of this trouble. She was all run down when she started taking the Compound and her periods did not come right. She was so poorly and weak that I often had to help her dress herself, but now she is regular and is growing strong and healthy."—Mrs. MARTIN HELVIG, Plover, Iowa.

Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

If you are ill do not drag along and continue to suffer day in and day out but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a woman's remedy for woman's ills.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Mr. George Buchanan, of the Meaford Road, had an exciting and perilous time one day recently. He was driving a load of hay to town and when coming down Hewett's hill, which is long, steep and crooked, with a bridge at the bottom, the tongue broke through the neckyoke and the load ran on the horses' heels. Of course they attempted to run away, but George, instead of allowing them free rein, jerked them into the ditch and up the bank. This upset the load. The horses ran and passed one on each side of a telephone pole, separating them. The wagon was strewn along the road for some distance, and the harness broken, but surprisingly little damage was done considering the nature of the accident.

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER XI.

An Encounter at the Carlton.

"This," Anna declared, as she sipped her wine and looked around her, "reminds me more of Paris than any place I have yet seen. I suppose it is the mirrors and decorations."

"And the people?" Brendon asked. "What do you think of them?"

Anna extended her critical survey and shrugged her shoulders.

"What can one say?" she exclaimed. "Did you ever see women so weary looking and so dowdy? They do not talk. They seem to spend their time yawning and inspecting their neighbors' dresses through those hateful glasses. It never seems to enter their heads to try and amuse their menkind."

"I guess they want a few American women here," Sydney remarked. "I can see what you mean. There's a sort of frozen way about so many of these English people."

Anna nodded.

"After all," she said, "I suppose it is because we do not understand what is correct. Vivacity is no doubt bad form. But why people come to such places if they do not mean to enjoy themselves I cannot imagine."

"To show their jewels and their husbands to their enemies," Brendon remarked.

"Poor husbands," Anna exclaimed compassionately. "Some day they will rebel. I believe that my sympathies will not be with my sex."

Two young men on their way down the room came suddenly to a standstill before Anna. The foremost, tall, clean-shaven, perfectly groomed, half extended his hand with a smile of recognition.

"Miss Pellissier, isn't it?" he said. "Glad to see you in London. No idea that you were here, though."

"My name is certainly Pellissier," she said, "but I am very sorry—I do not recognize you in the least."

The tall young man dropped his eyeglass and smiled.

"Had the pleasure of dining with you at the Ambassador's one night, before the show, you know—last September I think it was. Charley Pevemill was out host. My name is Armytage—Lord Ernest Armytage."

Anna had suddenly stiffened. She regarded the young man coldly. Her tone was icy.

"I am afraid that you are making a mistake," she said. "I was never at any such dinner, and I am quite sure that I do not know you."

"Perhaps you remember me, Miss Pellissier," the second young man interposed. "I had the pleasure of—er—meeting you more than once, I believe."

A spot of colour flared in Anna's cheek as she glanced towards the speaker. Something in his smile, in the cynical suggestiveness of his deferential tone, maddened her.

"To the best of my belief," she said, with quiet dignity, "I have never seen either of you before in my life."

For a fraction of a second the two young men hesitated. Then the foremost bowed and passed on.

"I am exceedingly sorry," he said. "Pray accept my apologies."

"And mine," murmured his companion, with the smile still lingering upon his lips.

They took their places at a distant table. Anna sat quite still for a moment, and then the color suddenly returned to her cheeks. She laughed softly, and leaned across the table.

"Do not look so uncomfortable, both of you," she begged. "Those young men startled me at first, because they knew my name. I am quite sure though that they did not mean to be rude."

"Impudent beggars," Sydney growled. "I never wanted to kick anyone so much in my life as that second fellow."

"I think," Anna said, "that it was only his manner. Do look at this tragedy in mauve, who has just come in. What can she be? The wife of a country tradesman, or a duchess? And such a meek little husband too. What can she have done to deserve such a fate? Oh!"

They both turned round at Anna's exclamation. A familiar figure was making his way towards them. Sydney sprang up.

"Why, it's David!" he exclaimed. "Hullo!"

Courtlaw, haggard, his deep-set eyes more brilliant than ever, took Anna's hand into his, and breathed a little close drawn sign of content. He was introduced to Brendon, and a chair was brought by an attentive waiter. He declined supper, but took wine.

"Have you dropped from the skies?" Sydney asked wonderingly. "It was only yesterday I had your letter, and you never mentioned coming over."

"I had some unexpected business," Courtlaw answered shortly.

"And how did you find us here?"

"I called at Montague Street a few minutes after you had left. Mrs. White told me where to find you."

He leaned back in his chair as though wearied. Yet either the rest or the wine seemed already to have done him good. The lines about his mouth gradually softened. He talked very little and rather absently. In no way could he be said to contribute to the gaiety of the little party. But when they were on their way out he whispered in Anna's ear.

"Please let me drive you home. I want to talk to you, and I must return to-morrow."

Anna hesitated.

"We are Mr. Brendon's guests," she said, "and I scarcely think it would be nice of me to leave him alone with Sydney."

Courtlaw turned abruptly to Brendon.

"Mr. Brendon," he said, "may I rob you of your guest just for the drive home? I have only a few hours in England, and Miss Pellissier is an old friend."

"By all means," Brendon answered. "We will follow you in another cab."

They passed out on to the pavement, and the commissionaire called a hansom. The man looked closely at Anna as she crossed the footway, and as he held her skirt from the wheel he pressed something into her hand. Her fingers closed upon it instinctively. It was a letter. She slipped it calmly into her pocket. The commissionaire smiled. It was a sovereign easily earned.

The hansom drove off. Suddenly Anna felt her hand seized and imprisoned in Courtlaw's burning fingers. She glanced into his face. It was enough.

"I have stood it for a month, Anna," he exclaimed. "You will not even answer my letters. I could not keep away any longer."

"Do you think that it was wise of you, or kind to come?" she asked quietly.

"Wise! Kind! What mockery words are! I came because I had to. I cannot live without you. Anna. Come back—you must come back. We can be married to-morrow in Paris. There! You are trying to take your hand away."

"You disappoint me," she said wearily. "You are talking like a boy. What is the use of it? I do not wish to marry you. I do not wish to return to Paris. You are doing your best to break our friendship."

"It is you," he cried, "you, who are talking folly, when you speak of friendship between you and me. It is not the woman who speaks there. It is the vapouring school girl. I tell you that I love you, Anna, and I believe that you love me. You are necessary to me. I shall give you my life, every moment and thought of my life. You must come back. See what you have made of me. I cannot work, I cannot teach. You have grown into my life, and I cannot tear you out."

Anna was silent. She was trembling a little. The man's passion was infectious. She had to school herself to speak the words which she knew would cut him like a knife.

"You are mistaken, David. I have counted you, and always hoped to count you, the best of my friends. But I do not love you. I do not love any one."

"I don't believe it," he answered hoarsely. "We have come too close together for me to believe it. You care for me a little, I know. I will teach you how to make that little sufficient."

"You came to tell me this?"

"I came for you," he declared fiercely.

The hansom sped through the crowded streets. Anna suddenly leaned forward and looked around her.

"We are not going the right way," she exclaimed.

"You are coming my way," Courtlaw answered. "Anna," he pleaded, "be merciful. You care for me just a little, I know. You are alone in the world, you have no one save yourself to consider. Come back with me to-night. Your old rooms are there, if you choose. I kept them on myself till the sight of your empty chair and the chill loneliness of it all nearly sent me mad."

"Drive to 13 Montague Street, cabman," she ordered.

The man pulled up his horse grumbling, and turned round. Courtlaw sat with folded arms. He said nothing.

"My friend," she said, "no! Let me tell you this. Nothing would induce me to marry you, or any man at present. I am a pauper, and as yet I have not discovered how to earn money. I am determined to fight my own little battle with the world—there must be a place for me somewhere, and I mean to find it. Afterwards, it may be different. If I marry you now I should feel a dependent being all my life—a sort of parasitical creature without blood or muscle. I should lose every scrap of independence—even my self-respect. However good you were to me, and however happy I was in other ways, I should find this intolerable."

"All these things," he muttered bitterly, "this desperate resolve to take your life into your own hands, your unnatural craving for independence would never trouble you for a moment—if you really cared."

"Then perhaps," she answered, with a new coldness in her tone, "perhaps I really do not care. No, don't interrupt. I think that I am a little disappointed in you. You appear to be amongst those strong enough in all ordinary matters, but who seem to think it quite natural and proper to give in at once and play the weakling directly—one cares. Do you think that it makes for happiness to force oneself into the extravagant belief that love is the only thing in the world worth having, and to sacrifice for it independence, self-respect, one's whole scheme of life. I cannot do it, David. Perhaps, as you say, I do not really care—but I cannot do it."

He was strangely silent. He did not even reply to her for several minutes.

"I cannot reason with you," he said at last wearily. "I speak from my heart, and you answer from your brain."

"Believe me that I have answered you wisely," she said, in a gentler tone, "wisely for you too, as well as for myself. And now you must go back, take up your work and think all this over. Presently you will see that I am right, and then you shall take your vacation over here, and we will be good comrades again."

He smiled bitterly as he handed her from the cab. He declined to come in.

"Will you tell Sydney that I will see him in the morning," he said. "I am staying at the Savoy. He can come round there."

"You will shake hands with me, please," she begged.

He took her fingers and lifted his eyes to hers. Something he saw there made him feel for a moment ashamed. He pressed the long shapely hand warmly in his.

"Good-bye," he said earnestly. "Please forgive me. You are right. Quite right."

She was able to go straight to her room without delay, and she at once locked the door with a little sigh of relief. She found herself struggling with a storm of tears.

A sob was strangled in her throat. She struggled fiercely not to give way.

"Oh, I am lonely," she moaned. "I am lonely. If I could but——"

* * * * * * *

To escape from her thoughts she began to undress, humming a light tune to herself, though her eyes were hot with unshed tears, and the sobs kept rising in her throat. As she drew off her skirt she felt something in her pocket, and she remembered the letter which the commissionaire at the Carlton had given her. She tore open the envelope and read it.

My Dear Girl,—

"I am so sorry if we made asses of ourselves to-night. The fact is I was so glad to see you again that it never occurred to me that a little discretion might be advisable. I'm afraid I'm a terribly clumsy fellow.

"I hope that you are going to allow me to see something of you during your stay in London, for the sake of old times. Could you come to tea at my rooms one afternoon, or would you dine with me somewhere, and do a theatre? We could have a private room, of course, if you do not wish to be seen about London, and a box at the theatre. I often think of those delightful evenings in Paris. May we not repeat them once, at any rate, in London?

"Ever yours,

"Nigel Ennison.

"PS. My address is 94 Pall Mall."

Anna read, and her cheeks grew scarlet. She crushed the letter in her hand.

"I wonder," she murmured to herself, "if this is the beginning."

CHAPTER XII.

The Tragedy of an Appetite.

Anna, notwithstanding her quiet clothes, a figure marvellously out of accord with her surroundings, sat before a small marble-topped table at a crowded A.B.C., and munched a roll of butter with hearty appetite.

"If only I could afford another!" she thought regretfully. "I wonder why I am always hungry nowadays. It is so ridiculous."

She lingered over her tea, and glancing around, a sudden reflection on the change in her surroundings from the scene of her last night's supper brought a faint, humorous smile to her lips. Her eyes brightened. She had to stifle a laugh. A harmless young City clerk, who had been watching her for the last half an hour in rapt admiration, accepted it for encouragement, and ventured upon a preliminary cough. A moment later he passed through the swing doors with scarlet cheeks. Anna, whom use had hardened to such episodes, remained unmoved.

"In two days," she reflected, "Mrs. White will present her bill. I have one shilling and sevenpence halfpenny left. I have two days in which to earn nearly thirty shillings—that is with no dinners, and get a situation. I fancy that this is a little more than playing at Bohemianism."

"So far," she continued, eyeing hungrily the last morsel of roll, which lay upon her plate, "my only chance of occupation has lain with a photographer who engaged me on the spot and insulted me in half-an-hour. What beasts men are! I cannot typewrite, my three stories are still wandering round, two milliners have refused me as a lay figure because business was so bad. I am no use for a clerk because I do not understand shorthand. After all, I fancy that I shall have to apply for a situation as a nursery governess who understands French. Faugh!"

She took up the last morsel of roll, and held it delicately between her long slim fingers. Then her white teeth gleamed, and her excuse for remaining any longer before that little marble table was gone. She rose, paid her bill, and turned westwards.

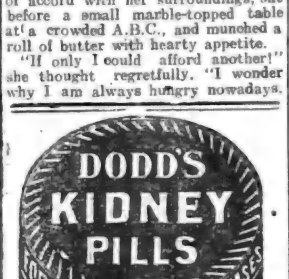
I OWE MY LIFE TO "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

They Did Me More Good Than All Other Treatments Combined

MRS. H. S. WILLIAMS



PALMERSTON, ONT., June 20th, 1913

"I really believe that I owe my life to "Fruit-a-tives". Ever since childhood, I have been under the care of physicians and have been paying doctors' bills. I was so sick and worn out that people on the street often asked me if I thought I could get along without help. The same old stomach trouble and distressing headaches nearly drove me wild. Some time ago I got a box of "Fruit-a-tives" and the first box did me good. My husband was delighted and advised a continuation of their use. "Fruit-a-tives" completely cured me.

Today, I am feeling fine, and a physician meeting me on the street, noticed my improved appearance and asked me the reason. I replied, "I am taking Fruit-a-tives". He said, "Well, if "Fruit-a-tives" are making you look so well, go ahead and take them. They are doing more for you than I can".

Mrs. H. S. WILLIAMS.

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Keeping Out of the Ruts

PARALYZED LIMBS.

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Honsburger, 10 Moore street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years."

KILL FLIES NOW.

The time to kill flies is before they become flies. One fly killed now will prevent the growth of thousands later on. A fly "is capable of depositing 150 eggs at one time and of producing five or six batches during its short life." Just what this means when extended to later generations may be guessed from the statement that "the progeny of a single pair of flies, assuming that all live, if pressed together at the end of the summer would occupy a space of over 14,000,000 cubic feet!" Glory be, they all don't live! Too many do, however; so get busy now. Destroy both flies and breeding places, such as manure and refuse of all kinds. The sooner such material is applied to the fields or burned the better.

NO DOG NUISANCE.

Alex. Thom, of Williamsburg township, has hit on an easy way to escape dog troubles in raising sheep, and will utilize an island in the St. Lawrence, about a mile east of Morrisburg, for the purpose. The island lies in front of his premises, and contains 50 acres. He has leased it for the purpose of stocking it with sheep. There he has confidence the sheep and mutton producers can graze secure from the dogs of either town or township. In the fall he will remove them to his barns. Many years ago, ere the bear and wolf danger had passed, there were far more sheep in Dundas county than are kept today. A historian of the county gives the number owned here in 1860 as 15,527; at present the figure is 5,542.

LIVED 200,000 YEARS AGO.

With the exception of a few minor bones, the complete skeleton of an imperial elephant, the only specimen in the world, has been taken from the La Brea field's asphalt beds in California, and when the bones are assembled, scraped and polished, they will be ready for mounting. The skeleton will be placed in the Museum of History, Science and Art at Exposition Park, Los Angeles, and will give that institution a dignity among scientists attained by no other building of its kind. The animal in life was more than sixteen feet long, fourteen feet high, and its tusks were approximately sixteen feet long. The find is a wonderful one, and the condition of the bones is splendid. It is believed that the spot where the imperial elephant was found is much older than the pits from which the remains of the saber tooth tigers and mastodon were taken. That is not easy to determine, however, as 5,000 years means nothing, geologically speaking. It is certain, however, that this imperial elephant belonged to the pleistocene age, which was 200,000 years ago.

The Late Mrs. Sloan

We regret to record the death of Mrs. Sloan, daughter of Mr. George Chapman, of Adjala, which took place at the home of her father near Connor on Sunday, May 3rd. Deceased, who was only in her 26th year, had been in ill-health for the past two years and her death was not unexpected. The funeral, which was a very large one, was held on the following Tuesday. The funeral service, which was held in Manny's church, was conducted by Rev. W. G. Marshall, of Mono Mills. The deceased is survived by her father, one sister, two brothers and a little son. The sorrowing friends have the sympathy of the community in their time of sorrow.

Death of Miss Hosick.

Miss Annie Hosick, a daughter of the late James Hosick and a sister of ex-reeve John H. Hosick, of Amaranth, passed away at her home, 69 Robert St., Toronto, on Thursday last after an illness of over a year's duration. The remains were brought to Orangeville on Saturday morning, the funeral taking place from the C.P.R. station to Greenwood Cemetery immediately after the arrival of the Toronto train. Rev. Dr. Murray, of Toronto, held service at the home on Friday night and Rev. J. R. Bell, of Laurel, conducted the service at the grave. The pallbearers were two nephews, James Hosick and James Digby; Wm. Wilson, W. H. Trimble, John Woulfe and J. H. Hosick. Miss Hosick is survived by two brothers and three sisters, namely, John H., of Webb Sask., Thos., of Greenridge, Man., Mrs. Carleton, of Arnott, Man., and Misses Sarah and Esther, in Toronto. The brothers and sisters have the sympathy of many friends hereabouts in their bereavement.

Mrs. Robert Meek.

The death of Mrs. Meek, widow of the late Robert Meek, of Alton, took place at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. Alex. Steele, Zina St., on Saturday after an illness of about one month's duration. Mrs. Meek, who had reached the ripe age of 81 years, had made her home with Mrs. Steele since last February. The deceased, whose maiden name was Margaret Harrison, was born in Albion township, where her father, Edward Harrison, resided. After her marriage to Mr. Meek, she took up her residence in Alton, where her husband was engaged in business and was for many years closely identified with the growth and development of that bustling village. Mr. Meek died in December 1895, a little more than 18 years ago. The late Mrs. Meek was a woman of fine character and superior attainments and enjoyed the respect and confidence of her friends to an unusual degree. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church and consistently followed the precepts of her Master in her daily round of life. She leaves a family of three sons and two daughters—Mr. J. L. Meek, of Goderich, formerly municipal clerk of Caledon, Dr. Edward and Mr. W. H. Meek, of Port Rowan, Mrs. Steele, Orangeville, and Mrs. C. O. McKeown, Toronto. The funeral was held from Mr. Steele's residence on Monday, the remains being taken to Alton for interment. Rev. W. M. Morris, pastor of St. Andrew's, held a short service at the home on Sunday night. The burial service was conducted by Rev. Dr. Armstrong, of Alton, Rev. Dr. Baker, Principal of Albert College, Belleville, who is a son-in-law, and Rev. Mr. Morris.

Death of Mrs. Adams.

On Friday evening death claimed another of Caledon's pioneers in the person of Mrs. Thos. Adams, of Melville Cross. The deceased was in her 76th year and was born and had lived all her life in Caledon, where she was widely known and highly respected. She leaves to mourn her loss her husband and a family of four sons—Andrew and Ernest, of Caledon; Capt. W. J. Adams, of the White Star Line, Detroit, and Albert, a jeweller in Watford. Another son died about ten years ago. One sister, Mrs. Porterfield, and a brother, J. W. Delaney, are the only surviving members of a large family. The late Mrs. Adams was one of the best of mothers and is spoken of by everyone as a very fine neighbor. By her own family she was held in the sincerest affection and her loss will be deeply mourned. The many beautiful flowers and the large concourse of people, who accompanied the remains to the grave on Monday bore testimony to the high respect in which she was held in the community of which she was such a useful resident. After a short service at the Methodist Church by Rev. F. N. Bowes, her pastor, the remains were taken to their last resting place in the Forest Lawn Cemetery. The pallbearers were the four sons and two nephews, John and Alex. Porterfield. Among the numerous floral tributes were the following:—a large wreath from the sons; a sheaf and sickle from Miss Margaret Chisholm, Toronto; a wreath of roses from the White Star Line and wreaths, Mrs. Fines and Mrs. Sawden; Misses White and Ellis, Orangeville, and Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Johnston. Among the friends from a distance, who were noticed at the funeral, were Mr. J. H. Wylie, Mr. and Mrs. Ephraim Knight and Miss Margaret Chisholm, of Toronto. The sympathy of the entire community goes out to the bereaved husband and family in their grievous loss.

The newest word is "Brampotorontorian"—a person who does business in Toronto, but resides in Brampton. There are now more than thirty persons who live in Brampton and have their business interests in the city.

Mr. Thos. Hamilton

Adjala lost a lifelong and highly respected resident last week in the person of Mr. Thomas Hamilton, whose death occurred very unexpectedly on Thursday morning last. Deceased, who was 64 years of age, was in the enjoyment of his usual good health until Wednesday preceding his death, when he was suddenly taken ill. The end came about 3 o'clock on Thursday morning. His death was caused by heart collapse. Mr. Hamilton, who lived about two lots north of Ballycroy, was born on the farm, on which he died. He was the last member of a large family of brothers and sisters. He is survived by a widow and a family of two sons and three daughters. The latter are Frank and Lauder, living in Adjala, Mrs. Wm. Matthews, Caledon East, Mrs. Geo. H. Watson, Athlone, and Miss Nellie at home. Deceased was a Presbyterian, an Orangeman and a Conservative. He was a Past Master of Ballycroy L.O.L. No. 185 and was buried with Orange honors. About 155 vehicles followed the remains from the home to Sloan's Presbyterian Church cemetery on Saturday afternoon. The services were conducted by Rev. J. A. Black, of Mono Mills, assisted by Revs. H. D. McCuaig, of Tottenham, and W. G. Marshall, of Mono Mills. Numerous floral offerings testified to the sorrow and sympathy of friends.

Mr. J. Wood, a student in McMaster University, who has been in charge of the Indian River and Warsaw fields of the Baptist Church, will at the close of the college year settle as pastor at Hillsburg and Erin.

Cattle Killed.

Mr. John Barclay, of Mono Centre, had two head of cattle killed by lightning during the storm last Wednesday night. The animals were in the barn yard quite close to one of the stable walls. The competition was very keen, all the city Collegiates, Upper Canada College, De la Salle Institute and a number of outside places such as Galt and St. Thomas having entered teams. Some of the Cadets had instructors from the permanent force, so that Mr. Reid is to be heartily congratulated upon the decisive victory which his corps scored against such thoroughly drilled competitors.

An Exemplary Subscriber.

Mr. Thos. Duke, of Vancouver, B. C., surprised The Banner last week by sending along a $5 cheque, with exchange added, and the following letter :—

Orangeville, Ont.

Gentlemen :

Enclosed herewith please find five dollars to pay my subscription to The Orangeville Banner until September, 1918. In renewing my subscription, I wish to say I have been a subscriber for many years, and although I am far from the land of my birth, I delight to read the news of the Home Land.

Thomas Duke.

Mr. Duke, who is a son of the late William Duke, 6th line, Mono, is a prominent business man in Vancouver and a leading British Columbia Orangeman. He is at the present time President of Britannia Investors, Limited.

An Alberta Letter

Writing from Medicine Hat, Alta., to renew his subscription to The Banner, Mr. J. J. Nicholson, formerly of Mono, says, "I expected to be living in Orangeville this summer as I had planned to reopen the Nottawa quarries. I find now that it is impossible for me to be there for the spring trade, so will not return until 1915. We will then make our home there if we can be content after six years in Sunny Southern Alberta, with six months out of each year spent on the vast prairie. We have grown to love this sunny broad land and feel a little unsettled about returning to Ontario, in spite of the fact that we think there is no place like old Dufferin. My land is 14 miles southwest of Medicine Hat. The farmers in this district are almost through seeding. Some of them have finished. I have put 85 acres under cultivation and expect to finish seeding this week. We have had splendid weather, bright and clear, with our first rain on May 3rd. Already we can see green fields, so that I might say the crop outlook is good so far. We have been living in Medicine Hat for three years now, except while on the farm during the busy crop times, so we have not been getting your valuable paper as regularly as we would like it. It is indeed like a letter from home."

Notes of Interest to Military Men.

Local Company is Looking for Recruits for Niagara Camp.

The local company of the 36th Regiment is looking for recruits for the coming Camp, and an advertisement appears elsewhere in this issue. Owing to the fact that there has been some talk of moving the whole Batcalion from Dufferin County it it to be hoped that the young men of Orangeville district, and the citizens generally, will assist the local officers to recruit a full company this year, thus showing that Orangeville at least is able, as in the past, to furnish a quota of men for the Militia Camp.

The following officers of the 36th have passed examinations in Toronto :—Lt. H. B. McGuire, "H" Co., for the rank of Capt.; Lt. C. Hagyard "A" Co., for the rank of Lieut.; Lt. Medhurst, "C" Co., for the rank of Lieut.; Lt. Sterling, "F" Co., for the rank of Lieut.

The headquarters of "E" Company have been moved from Grand Valley to West Toronto, where an unusually fine company has been recruited by Capt. Collins, the new officer in command. The men are drilling every Wednesday night, and are now in excellent shape. The company is unique in as much as all the 42 members have served in the Imperial Army. 30 of the men have medals for active service, while several have three and even four. Capt. Collins himself served through the South African War. The physical standard for admission is unusually high, and all the men are well fit for hard service. The ages vary from 22 to 45 years.

The 36th Regiment has opened an office and Orderly Room at 333 High Park Avenue, West Toronto, where all the clerical work of the Battalion is attended to, and men examined and passed for "C", "F" and "F" companies, which will likely form the nucleus of the new city corps next year. Men entering these companies are required to pass a physical and medical examanation, and attend several recruit drills before being sworn in. This is a distinct improvement on the manner of obtaining recruits in rural districts. The city men are enthusiastic, and welcome the opportunity of taking a twelve-day outing with pay in addition; whereas the men from the farms and towns are slow to avail themselves of the unusual opportunity.

The Signal Corps of the 36th Regiment took second place of all the corps drilling at Niagara Camp last year. About half the members were in passession of Signalling Certificates. The detachment has been practising during the winter months, and is now up to full strength, with all members fully qualified. A new set of heliograph instruments, and lamps for night signalling, have been received, and already the men are very proficient in their use. It is expected the detachment will easily climb to first place this year.

The officers have subscribed the sum of $125.00 to cover the rent of a large dining tent, tables, dishes, etc., for the men of the 36th Regiment, so that there will in no way be cause for complaint this year.

Newspaper Men Meet.

A meeting of the Dufferin County Press Association was held in the Auditorium of the Public Library on Friday afternoon. All the publishers of the county were present. The afternoon was spent discussing such topics as clubbing with the city dailies, the probable effect of rural mail delivery, job work prices, local and foreign advertising and the standardizing of local newspapers. Officers were elected as follows :—

President—A. D. McKitrick
Vice-President—T. F. E. Clarridge
Secretary-Treasurer—John Foley.
Executive—R. L. Mortimer, W. L. Craig and the President.
Auditors—V. A. Statia and B. McGuire.

Clean Up Week.

Mr. Arthur Huston, formerly of Melville Cross, who is now touring in the United States, writes The Banner advocating the introduction here of a "clean-up week," which he says has become a general thing in the American cities. "We noted the campaign," Mr. Huston states, "in the cities we toured the past few weeks and the publicity given it by the newspapers, which gave it prominence even over the war news, while the street cars and billboards were heavily placarded. The general public also entered enthusiastically into the campaign. In Philadelphia the entire street cleaning department paraded the main street in spotless white uniforms. Special service is given the public free of removing and disposing of any refuse and rubbish with special request to kill the house fly now and rid up their breeding places."

The new Victoria school at Berlin is to be enlarged at a cost of between $25,000 and $30,000.

Bowlers Elect Skips.

Orangeville lawn bowlers elected their skips at a special general meeting held in the Library Auditorium on Friday night. Over 30 members turned out to the meeting and evinced the liveliest kind of interest in the proceedings. Heretofore the skips have been chosen by a vote of the members, but Dr. Campbell was responsible for a change on the method of selection. After this season the Skips and Vice-Skips of the rinks which finish in the first division of the Club's rink competition will be appointed Skips for the ensuing year. In case any of these are unwilling or unable to act, then the Skip and Vice-Skip of the leading rink in the second division shall be substituted, this procedure being continued, if necessary, until the required number of Skips is obtained. It is thought that the new method, which will take effect next season, will have the effect of stimulating interest in the rink competitions and of preventing defaults in the series.

The following Skips were selected for this season :—Geo. Beswick, Dr. W. H. Bowles, Geo. E. Irown, Dr. Campbell, Dr. Carson, Dr. Kyles, A. D. McKitrick, J. D. McMillan, Harry Reid, F. W. Ritchie, R. H. Robinson and A. A. Smith.

The Club made a conditional grant of $25 to the proposed Park to the south-west of the bowling green. The meeting decided not to build a new club house this year, but steps will be taken to fill up the old race at the south side of the grounds, provided a satisfactory title can be procured. If this is done a new club house will probably be built next year somewhat to the south of the ground occupied by the present building. A committee was appointed to consider plans and obtain an estimate of the cost.

Hospital Notes

The monthly meeting of the Lord Dufferin Chapter of the Daughters of the Empire was held on Friday, May 7th, at the home of Mrs. F. W. Ritchie, 1st Ave. The meeting was well attended and proved most satisfactory in all respects. Many new and interesting plans were discussed for improving and enlarging the hospital. After the business had been transacted there was a short musical programme. Tea was then served and the meeting was brought to a close with the singing of the National Anthem.

The Daughters of the Empire have seen fit to reward Miss Barclay for her services during the past year and a half as Superintendent of Lord Dufferin Hospital by an increase in salary. Miss Barclay, we are sure, has the interests of the hospital at heart and patients invariably speak most highly of the service and equipment there.

WHAT MOTHERS SAY OF BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Thousands of mothers use no other medicine for their little ones but Baby's Own Tablets. Once a mother has used the Tablets she will use no other medicine. Concerning them Mrs. Geo. M. Binns, Clifford, Ont., writes : "Enclosed find twenty-five cents for another box of Baby's Own Tablets, as I would not be without them. When baby is cross and ailing I give him a tablet or two and he is soon well and happy again. I know of no other medicine to equal them and find them far superior to Castor oil." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

To Hold Gold Mine.

LIFE INSURANCE FOR YOUR HOUSE

A TREE often lives several hundred years. Nature has protected the wood by covering it with bark to shield it from the elements.

When trees are sawed into lumber, Nature's protection is lost. Therefore, the wood used in your house must be paint protected to insure it against wear and weather.

"100% Pure" Paint is a good life insurance policy on your house. It protects against decay—pays for itself, over and over again, in the repairs it saves—adds value and beauty to the building as well as long life to the wood.

Martin-Senour "100% Pure" Paint

is what we recommend for all outside and inside painting. "100% Pure" is genuine White Lead, Oxide of Zinc, purest Colors, and Linseed Oil — ground to extreme fineness by powerful machinery—the combination of which produces a paint that is greatest in hiding, covering and wearing qualities—and makes it the cheapest to use as well as the most satisfactory.

Let us help you in selecting colors for your spring painting. 15

A CHURCH TREASURER'S CONFESSION.

A certain class of churchgoers must sing with great joy the line "Salvation is free for you and me," says a writer in The Congregational (Boston), and he adds that they consider it so absolutely free as to feel "under no obligation to pay a cent for their share of it." The statement proceeds from a man who has been a church treasurer for 21 years and now for the first time breaks his silence about some of his discoveries in the realm of giving, reminding us that a church treasurer learns things no one else in the church may learn, many of which are rather amazing. For instance, he mentions the large number in some churches who give nothing at all towards their support; and he contrasts the man with an income of six hundred dollars a month, who gives fifty cents on Sunday, with the washerwoman who gives the same amount. Proportionately, we are informed, "the poor give infinitely more than the well-to-do," while those who give least usually have most to say about how the church should be run. The writer cites some amusing apologies of members who have fallen behind in their contributions and speaks of others who when gently urged to pay their subscriptions treated him resentfully and accused him of un-Christianlike behaviour. Nevertheless he has a word of appreciation for "the true-hearted men and women" who do their duty in the support of their church, and ventures the hope that the other kind may soon be "educated up to giving." On the subject of the greater generosity of the poor we read:

"The church treasurer who is making these reflections has on his books names of persons with incomes of but ten and twelve dollars a week who give from fifty cents to a dollar of this income every week to the various offerings of the church. He could, if need be, produce the names of several working girls receiving from five to seven dollars a week whose regular weekly contributions to the church alone are from forty to fifty cents, and all of these girls I've away from home and pay roomrent and board. He could place beside these names a long list of names of persons whose wages exceed $25 a week who give from twenty-five to forty cents a week. He could give the name of a widow, with four children all under fifteen years of age, and the needle of this poor woman is the chief support of the family. Two of the boys earn a small sum before and after school, but it is doubtful if the combined income of the family exceeds twelve dollars, but this mother and each of her four children have a package of church contribution envelopes and these envelopes are dropped into the contribution baskets every Sunday of the year. There may be Sundays when only one member of the family appears at church, but when that happens, and it happens seldom, all five of the envelopes come with that member of the family.

"In contrast to this it would be easily possible to give the name of a well-to-do family of six persons, the husband and father of which is the only person having envelopes. He gives a dollar on Sunday for the entire family to 'save the bother' of all the family having envelopes. The moral affect of each member having his or her own envelopes and giving regularly and systematically is lost sight of, while the treasurer falls to wondering how this man can feel that a dollar a week is a fair and generous offering for six persons in a family in which the combined income must be well on to one hundred dollars a week."

Only an abundant sense of humor can keep a church treasurer from becoming sour and cynical, we are told by the writer, who says, in comparing the giving habits of young people that "girls and women are more conscientious than boys and men.....and give more generously of their income."

The excuses offered by the "forgetful" members when their memory is refreshed also is a cause of wonderment to this church treasurer, who remarks:

"He has been told that 'back envelopes' cannot be filled because their owners have bought a piano 'on payments' and all other financial obligations must be held in abeyance until the piano is paid for. He has even been told by a prospective bride that her offering of ten cents a week would be discontinued in view of the expense of her approaching nuptials, but that she would seek to get her husband-to-be to double his subscription as soon as they were married, and that would 'even things up.' He has had subscriptions discontinued because the pastor 'hit' some one in his sermons, even though the pastor has had no intention of being personal and is happily unaware of the fact that he has clubbed any one. But the pastor seldom remains for long happily unaware of any of his blunders. He usually has knowledge of them on the very heels of their commitment."

Referring finally to the contention of some that church people have not been taught how to give and that the problem of church support is merely "a matter of education," the writer says that "it would be easy to secure the signatures of many church treasurers to a petition to have such a school started as soon as possible. Only the church treasurer knows how much it is needed."—The Literary Digest.

SUFEERS FROM PAINFUL RHUMATISM

Liniments of No Avail—Must be Cured Through the Blood.

Why are there so many failures in the treatment of rheumatism? Why are so many sufferers resigned to a life of pain, despairing of a permanent cure?

Because rheumatism defies any treatment that does not build up and purify the blood. The poisons of rheumatism are in the blood and it is only through the blood that the disease can be fought successfully. Unless the blood is weak and impure rheumatism cannot get a foothold. When it does the thin and impure blood is not strong enough to overcome the poisons alone. It must be strengthened and purified. Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People are the best blood-building medicine you can take. They make new blood with every dose and promptly check further progress of the disease. They make the blood so pure and strong that not the least trace of rheumatism remains. Mr. R. J. Sinclair, Goshen, N.S., says: "About two years ago I was laid up with rheumatism. For two months I could not walk and had to stay in an invalid's chair. My feet were badly swollen and my arms seemed to be paralyzed. I had been using doctor's medicine for a long time, but it did not seem to help me, and the doctor finally told me that the only thing that would cure me would be a change of climate. At this time I decided to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial and got a supply. After I had taken them for a while I found they were helping me, and I got a further supply and they completely cured me, and I have not been sick one day since. I strongly recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for this trouble."

You can get these Pills from any dealer in medicines or by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS

Parents are landmarks and little ones copy them.

The plant of happiness cannot thrive without an air of cheerfulness.

It is noble to live for others but it is a crime to neglect ourselves.

Keep a close eye on the man whose wife is afraid to ask him for money.

Our achievements are less than our intentions are usually. Let us aim high.

Good appearances may be pleasant but solid realities are safer and more comfortable.

There is no work so humble that faithfulness in it will not be noticed and rewarded.

Take your wife on a holiday occasionally. It will brighten her up and keep the wrinkles from her face.

Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine. Learn how to tell a story. A well told story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sick room.

It is not a mere accident of disposition whether we persistently look on the dark and gloomy or on the brighter side of things but a habit of mind which we can cultivate or allow to die through want of use.

Praise your wife sometimes. She works hard enough as a general rule with small compensation and less cheer than any other member of the family. You like to be told that you can do your particular kind of work better that anyone else can, so why should you withhold the same merited praise from the woman who makes and keeps your home bright for you?

Mrs. A. Miller, an elderly lady resident of Tara, died of shock as a result of the big fire there a short time ago.

Brantford hotelmen have themselves prepared a prohibited list of 75 persons and will fine any proprietor who violates.

Mrs. Jas. McLachlan, of the 6th of Egremont, near Mt. Forest, was taking a picture from the wall when the glass broke and in falling, struck both her arms, inflicting deep wounds. A large artery in one of them was severed, and had it not been for prompt surgical attent on the result might have been serious.

HERBERT W. KENNEDY, B.A.

Georgetown has lost her most useful citizen. After a long period of ill health and six weeks of distressing illness this leading citizen passed away on Friday, 1st May. His ailment was an internal one of malignant growth affecting the liver and stomach. Herbert Willis Kennedy, B. A., was the son of the late George Kennedy, and was born on the family homestead adjoining the northerly limits of the corporation, fifty years ago. He had a goodly heritage in his parentage, who were upright, God-fearing and influential pioneers of Georgetown. After completing his elementary education Mr. Kennedy took the arts course at Victoria University, Cobourg, and graduated with honors. He was married about twenty-five years ago to Miss Mary S. Culp and shortly thereafter was appointed to a professorship in Albert College, Belleville, where he did a most acceptable work. College work was found to be too confining and he retired from this position and returned to his native town. His first great sorrow came upon the death of his wife nearly 20 years ago. On the 11th July, 1900, he married Miss Jennie M. Hutt, B. A., who was a teacher in Georgetown High School. Mrs. Kennedy and three children, George, Lillian and Margaret are left without his tender and solicitous care. Mr. Kennedy was a most versatile man in his public services. He was active alike in the church, in municipal and educational matters, as a magistrate in the fair and impartial administration of justice, and as a friend of everybody, a valued friend and adviser wherever advice and counsel were needed. He succeeded his father, the late George H. Kennedy, as Recording Steward of the Methodist Church, upon his death 12 years ago, was superintendent of the Sunday School for fourteen years, had been Reeve of Georgetown, and was Clerk and Treasurer, Chairman of the Public Library, Treasurer for the Board of Education at the time of his death. His sterling character and uprightness gave him the unqualified confidences of all. Like his father he was a staunch temperance man and a Liberal. The funeral on Monday was very largely attended. It was conducted by his pastor, Rev. S. M. Roadhouse, who was assisted by Rev. C. L. McIrvine, Berlin, President of the Conference, who was a pupil of Mr. Kennedy at Albert College; Rev. Geo. A. Mitchell, a former pastor, and Rev. Mr. Cameron, Presbyterian minister. The pallbearers were Messrs. R. D. Warren, Toronto, R. D. Coutts, Wm. Bowman, Robt. Creelman, Prof. Hutt, Guelph, and Wm. Thompson.—Acton Free Press.

HEALTHY HAIR--NO MORE DANDRUFF

Use Parisian Sage.

It's entirely needless to have unsightly, matted, thin or faded hair. A little care is all that is needed to make it thick, soft, pretty, perfectly healthy and free from dandruff.

Use Parisian Sage—it supplies hair needs and is absolutely harmless. It quickly stops itching head and falling hair, and is one of the best tonics to invigorate the scalp and make the hair grow long and beautiful.

Get a bottle of Parisian Sage today from F. S. Pickering or at any drug counter. It costs but 50 cents. Rub it into the scalp—all dandruff disappears—your head feels fine—the hair is pretty and perfectly healthy.

WHEN ANIMALS SLEEP.

Elephants sleep standing up. When in a herd a certain number will always stand watch while the others sleep, for the big, powerful beasts are timid and cautious at night and will not go to sleep unguarded.

Bats sleep head downward, hanging by their hind claws.

Birds, with few exceptions, sleep with their heads turned tailward over the back and the beak thrust beneath the wing.

Storks, gulls and other long-legged birds sleep standing on one leg.

Ducks sleep on open water. To avoid drifting ashore, they keep paddling with one foot, thus making them move in a circle.

Foxes and wolves sleep curled up, their noses and the soles of their feet close together and blanketed by their bushy tails.

Lions, tigers and cat animals stretch themselves out flat upon the side. Their muscles twitch and throb, indicating that they are light and restless sleepers.

Owls, in addition to their eyelids, have a screen that they draw sideways across their eyes to shut out the light, for they sleep in the daytime.

PIANO MAKER PRAISES ZAM-BUK.

BEST FOR STIFFNESS AND SPRAINS.

As an embrocation for stiffened muscles, sprains, rheumatism, etc., there is nothing like Zam-Buk. Its penetrating powers are so great that it gives almost instant relief. Mr. D. R. Gourlay, of Messrs. Gourlay, Winter & Leeming, the well-known piano manufacturers of Toronto, used Zam-buk, and this is his experience: "I have much pleasure in stating that two applications of Zam-Buk entirely cured me of a very severe strain of the back. While not given to the indiscriminate use of, or belief in, patent medicines, I can conscientiously recommend Zam-Buk."

Zam-Buk is used by the world's foremost athletes. Why not give it a trial. Price 50c. per box, at all druggists and stores. Zam-Buk is also best for eczema, cuts, sores, bruises, ulcers, piles, and all skin diseases.

NEW BRUNSWICK WOMAN'S MESSAGE

Tells Her Suffering Sisters to Find Relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. James B. Roy was Ill for Two Years and the Doctor Could not Help Her—How She Found a Cure.

Tremblay Settlement, Gloucester Co., N.B., May 15th (Special).—Mrs. James B. Roy, an estimable lady, well known here, has made the following statement for publication:

"For two years I suffered from an extreme weakness and an awful pain in the back. Sometimes my back was always nervous, I had no appetite and I was failing very fast. I took medicines from a doctor, but continued to grow worse.

"Then I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills and soon began to improve. By the time I had finished the third box I was completely cured. I know I owe my cure to Dodd's Kidney Pills, and I want other sufferers to know that they also may be cured."

Mrs. Roy's symptoms showed that she had Kidney trouble. That's why she found speedy relief and complete cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills. They are a Kidney remedy, pure and simple. The reason they cure so many suffering women is that nine-tenths of women's troubles come from sick Kidneys.

THE BANNER

THE BANNER, MAY 21st, 1914.

Will Take Their Profits.

The Western grain growers are now busily engaged in sowing the seed that is to bring forth the harvest upon which all commercial Canada looks for financial advantage. The railways will earn millions upon millions by carrying the wheat to market; the manufacturers will sell enormous quantities of their products to those who have grown the wheat, and the bankers will secure goodly interest charges on their loans advanced to the farmers before harvest. Many industries in Toronto and other eastern industrial centres will expand, factories will be enlarged, more workmen will be employed, and larger profits will be secured as a result of the harvest for which the grain growers are now sowing. Yes, even though the grain growers may be despised by some of the eastern protectionists and privileged interests none of these gentlemen will permit their antipathy to the grain growers to interfere with the profits they expect to get from this year's harvest.—Grain Growers' Guide.

THE CONVENTION

Dufferin Conservatives Will Nominate Candidates for Commons and Legislature

Meetings to Select Delegates to be Held Wednesday Evening, June 3rd.

As intimated in last week's Banner, a Convention of the Liberal-Conservatives of Dufferin County will be held in the Town Hall in Shelburne on Friday, June 5th. Our prediction that the delegates would be asked to select a candidate for the House of Commons as well as one for the Legislature has turned out to be correct. The posters, which President Cornelius has sent out for the purpose of announcing the Convention, state positively that it is called for the purpose of selecting candidates for the House of Commons and the Legislature. This is the course that has usually been followed in the past. If the procedure at former Conventions is observed the Convention will probably be asked to select the Federal nominee before the matter of making a choice for the Legislature is considered.

Meetings will be held in the different polling divisinon at 7 o'clock on Wednesday evening, June 3rd, for the purpose of appointing the delegates. Each of the 43 polling divisions in the County is entitled to select a delegate for every 25 voters on the list, or major fraction thereof, who are entitled to vote at elections to the Lerislative Assembly. Rural depopulation is having its effect upon the size of the Convention. Two hundred and thirty delegates had seats and voted at the last Convention, but on the basis already stated the Convention on June 5th will be composed of 215 delegates. The following is the representation of the various municipalities —

Amaranth	29
East Luther	16
East Garafraxa	18
Grand Valley	8
Melancthon	36
Mono	33
Mulmur	35
Orangeville	29
Shelburne	11

Orangeville's representation by wards is as follows — North, 7; South, 9; West 6 and East 7.

At the present time John Best, who represents the County at Ottawa, is the only person who is seriously talked of for the Federal seat. Mr. Best may have opposition, but there is little indication of it at the present time. C. R. McKeown, M.P.P., will of course be a candidate for the Provincial seat. Mr. John A. Cornelius, ex-reeve of East Garafraxa and President of the Dufferin Conservative Association, and ex-Warden Bryan appear to be his most formidable opponents. Both men are working quietly and may develop considerable strength in the Convention. Ex-reeve Arch. Greer, of Mulmur, is also spoken of as a possible candidate. It is said that ex-Mayor Riddell, of Orangeville, may be induced to allow his name to go before the Convention. Harry has a host of friends in the County, some of whom think he would make an excellent representative at Toronto.

Driven Nearly Insane

By the Tortures of Sciatica

Such has been the experience of many a poor sufferer from this affliction. The sciatic nerves, when inflamed are capable of giving the most excruciating torture possible to imagine. Thanks to a discovery by Dr. Stohr, an Austrian specialist, relief quickly follows a dose of Kephaldol. The fame of this prescription has spread all over the civilized world and Kephaldol is heartily endorsed by the medical profession because Sciatica, Lumbago, Rheumatism or Neuralgia yield to a few doses and no safer or more reliable prescription has been found. If you find it difficult to obtain locally, the manufacturers will send you a large tube on receipt of 50c. Kephaldol Limited, 31 Latour St., Montreal.

THE TOWN COUNCIL.

Business Men Suggest Change in Nightwatchman's Hours.

Crushed Stone Will be Used for Repairing Mill St.

The Town Council held a lengthy meeting on Monday night. A number of important matters were disposed of and it was quite late when the session was brought to a close. Councillor Johnston was taken ill during the meeting and was obliged to retire. He was taken to his home, where it was found necessary to call a physician to his aid.

Corporation accounts were passed as follows:—Dr. T. H. Henry, re. Board of Health, $15; W. O. Thomas, $10.88; Geo. King, $9.40; Thos. Campbell, $4.94; Sam Street, $4.93; Archie Irwin, $15; T. Pullman, $4.25; Chas. Parsons, $2.55; J. B. McNiobol, $8; J. F. Baker, $4.50; E. H. Smith, $1.25.

W. N. Irwin wrote the Council in behalf of Geo. Lawson, who was fined $100 for selling liquor and who, in default of payment of the fine, is now serving three months in the county gaol. Council has no power to remit the fine, but Mr. Irwin thought that the Attorney-General would be willing to release the young man if asked to do so. Lawson, he pointed out, was the chief support of his mother and young sister. Council declined to take any action in the matter.

E. H. Smith, who is leaving town shortly, tendered his resignation as weighmaster. The resignation was accepted and P. V. Griggs was appointed weighmaster.

The Public Works Department wanted to know if the Council had appointed a Building Inspector as provided for by the Building Trades Protection Act. No appointment has been made, but the Clerk was instructed to have the necessary by-law in readiness for next meeting.

Council decided to pay the assessment of $10, which represents the annual fee for membership in the Provincial Hydro-Electric Radial Union.

A letter from W. M. Lockhart, Clerk of Alliston, stated that the Alliston Council had passed a resolution requesting the survey of the proposed hydro-radial railway route from Guelph to Alliston via Orangeville and had forwarded a copy to Hon. Adam Beck.

Rev. Geo. W. Tebbs, the Secretary, made application for a grant in behalf of the work of the Dufferin County Children's Aid Society. The matter was referred to a special committee composed of the Reeve and Deputy-Reeve. The Committee will wait to learn what action the County Council takes at its June meeting before making a report.

A number of Broadway business men petitioned the Council to make some modification in the hours of duty of Nightwatchman Thos. Dawson. The petitioners expressed the opinion that in the recent arrangement of his hours of duty the Council had required too much from Mr. Dawson for the salary paid. The following time schedule was also suggested:—April 15th to Oct. 15th, 10 p.m. to 5 a.m.; Oct. 15th to Dec. 1st, 10 p.m. to 6 a.m.; Dec. 1st to Mar. 1st, 10 p.m. to 7 a.m.; Mar. 1st to April 15th, 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. The Clerk was instructed to prepare a by-law regulating the hours in accordance with the wishes of the petitioners.

The report of the Special Committee appointed to look into the matter of closing the mill race in the South Ward was presented by Reeve White. The Committee recommended that the Corporation fill in the portion of the race crossing John St. The Committee stated that the filthy condition of the race and the creek running through the West and North Wards could be best remedied by the Board of Health.

The Streets Committee recommended the construction of a cement sidewalk on the south side of Elizabeth St. from Prince of Wales St. to the west side of John Cruikshank's property. The Committee, through its chairman, Reeve White, also submitted estimates of the cost of placing gravel or crushed stone on Mill St. Gravel, the report stated, would cost 65c per yard and crushed stone 70c to 75c per ton, f.o.b. Melville Cross or $1.00 per yd. placed on the street. The latter material will run 2200 to 2300 lbs. to the cubic yard. The Committee recommended that 200 yds. at the south end of the street and 100 yds. immediately south of Broadway be covered with crushed stone. Council adopted the report.

The overflow drain from the fire hall reservoir will be diverted into the Broadway sewer. At present the drain runs south to the John St. race.

The Industrial Committee recommended that the Corporation make a standing offer of exemption from taxation except for school purposes, free water and free building sites to any industries that may desire to locate in Orangeville. The offer is made subject to the requirements and obligations imposed by the Municipal Act. The Clerk was instructed to forward a copy of the report to the Board of Trade.

Mr. H. A. Dorrance addressed the Council in behalf of the Horticultural Society, which proposes to plant 160 shade trees on the streets this year. The Society is asking the town to furnish a man to assist with the planting. The request was granted.

The Agricultural Society wishes to open a street on Mr. Thompson's property west of the Exhibition grounds. Ex-Mayor W. M. Green and Mr. A. E. Annis addressed the Council, urging co-operation in the matter.

The Standing Committees were requested to get their estimates in shape as early as possible.

The Town Property Committee and Reeve White were deputed to wait upon the Public School Board relative to the increase of the insurance on the Opera House because of the use of the old Council Chamber as a manual training room.

The Orangemen of Connor L.O.L. No. 125 are planning to hold a garden party on Mr. Roy Varey's grounds, lot 6, con. 3, Adjala township, on Wednesday evening, June 3rd. An excellent programme is being arranged. Fuller particulars later.

Seeding will be through at the end of this week if the weather keeps fine.

Our young men have reorganized Laurel Baseball team for the season. They intend to play at Mono Rocks on May 25th.

Don't forget Laurel Methodist garden party.

MELANCTHON VILLAGE.

Our neighbor and popular stonemason, Mr. Wm. Mills, is making preparations to build a new frame barn with stone basement this season.

Several of the farmers are through seeding and others who have some wet lands are finishing up this week. It has been a rather backward season with frosts several nights last week.

Melancthon township council will meet in the town hall here on the 27th inst. as a Court of Revision at which appeals against the assessment may be heard. We understand that several appeals will be made.

Mr. Isaac Traynor, P.L.S., of Dundalk, the township engineer, with a gang of men, is now working on what is known as the McCue drain completing the survey preparatory to the work of reconstructing the present drain. This drain is looked upon as a hard prosposition for the ratepayers concerned, and will go down into history as Melancthon's "Dead Sea."

Our village merchant, Mr. Chas. O'Neill, is very busy these days and has put a delivery rig on the road so as to reach his customers at a distance who are too busy to come to town during the seeding time but do their shopping by telephone. This rural phone and rural mail are proving to be quite an advantage to the farmers.

A number of whiskey trials and convictions have taken place in the suburbs village (town?) of Shelburne recently. Several cases of "Fire water" have been dropped off at this station also, but is it not just possible that the cases consigned to Melancthon are like those consigned to Melville Jct., both places being convenient points for the accommodation of citizens residing in the nearby towns.

There is a large quantity of wood, posts and telephone poles in the C. P. R. station yard here—more than there has been for some time, but we presume Mr. P. Sime, the genial Corbetton wood dealer, has bought up most of it, for he took a run down to our burg the other day.

Real estate is still moving in our burg. Mr. George Shoaff has purchased the house and lot which was formerly the residence of the late Teacher Gray, on Main Street, from Mr. Albert Chipchase, of Toronto, who bought it only a short time ago from the heirs of the late Mr. Gray. The building was built by George Pugsley about thirty years ago, and was later occupied and conducted as a hotel, by Tim Sullivan, now of Toronto, and was well-known as the "Melancthon House."

Rev. Father Morphy, who has been the faithful priest at the R.C. church here for the past 13 years, has been transferred by His Lordship, Bishop Dowling, of Hamilton, to a charge at Cayuga, and Rev. Father Clohey, formerly rector of Brampton R. C. church, will assume the work of this parish, which is in connection with Dundalk.

Mr. S. Sawden, of Toronto, has been up here for the past ten days superintending some improvements on his farm. Mr. S. reports times as being lively in the Queen City.

Mr. Michael Waters had the misfortune to get kicked by a horse the other day, getting three ribs broken.

Mr. James Hammond had a trip to Grand Valley on Saturday.

Rev. C. C. Otton preached in his own pulpit here last Sunday, and Mr. R. J. Woods will (D.V.) preach next Sabbath afternoon at 3 p.m.

Mr. James Sawden has been on the sick list for the past few days, but is improving.

Mr. Jas. Hammond drove down to Orangeville fair on Thursday last and sold three young horses for which he received a nice sum of money.

Messrs. R. H. J. Smith & Son have taken Mr. Philip McGarvey's farm, opposite the Macville school, to work on shares, and have the crop all in; hence they will have two farms this year.

Mr. West Mills, who recently returned from Chicago, is now engaged with Mr. James West for the spring work on the farm.

ROSEMONT.

At time of writing the weather is very warm and the crops are in bad need of rain.

Mrs. Ed. Little fell last week and got her collarbone broken.

Mr. J. W. Armstrong has purchased a new buggy.

A happy bunch of ten from this part went up to the fishery not long ago, but the fish heard them while they were yet afar off and when they arrived the members of the finny tribe were all so badly frightened that they hid and hence they were compelled to return home with two fish, one of which was wounded before.

Mr. Geo. Armstrong purchased a new Gray buggy last week.

Mrs. Will Morrison, of Essa, spent a few days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Little, last week.

Mrs. John D. Little is in Everett waiting on her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Kidd, who have been very ill.

Mr. Oswald Armstrong spent a few days with Orangeville friends last week.

Mr. Milford Murphy passed through our village on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ireland, of Perm, spent Sunday at Mr. Robt. Peacock's.

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Murphy, of Tossorontio, spent Sunday at Mr. McDowell's,

CALEDON.

Spring seeding is finished and gardening is now the order of the day.

Mr. Ben Harrison, of Toronto, spent the week-end at the parental home here.

Miss Grace Campbell, who has been indisposed for the past two weeks, is now, we are pleased to state, convalescing.

Mr. Wm. Sutton has been appointed Commissioner on 15 sideroad, east, for the Good Roads system. "Billy" has had a wide experience in road making and will sure make a good job. We wish his success.

Will Caledon furnish any of the June brides? We are never far behind, but wait and see. Further particulars later.

(Intended for last week.)

Despite the unfavorable weather most of our farmers are well on with their seeding.

Mr. G. A. Kearns, of Chicago, visited his brother here last week. Mr. K. is a building contractor and was over to Toronto figuring on the new Union Station, which seems to be a sure thing bow.

Miss Mabel Sanderson returned last week from Missouri, where she has been visiting her aunt for the past two months. Miss Sanderson reports a splendid time in the land of the Stars & Stripes, but O you Canada, O you Caledon and O you

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Leslie visited the former's sister, Mrs. W. J. Warnock, for a few days last week.

Mr. Albin Lemon loaded a car of cattle here last week and many who saw them report that thet were the best bunch that have left here for many a day. They were all his own raising and certainly reflected great credit on Mr. Lemon as a stock man.

Mr. Thos. Bell, who purchased lot 10, 1st line, east, from Mr. Thos. Chambers, has sold again to Mr. Jas. Pearson, K.C. Mr. Pearson is now one of the largest land owners in this township.

Mr. Geo. Sanderson, of Toronto, is visiting at the home of his brother, and has been entertaining quite a number of friends each night with his splendid Victor gramaphone.

Reeve Quinn, Deputy-Reeve Armstrong and Engineer Wheelock made a tour of inspection over the Good Roads system in this township on Monday last and report everything in a very satisfactory condition. They expect to finish up the roads this year that have been taken over by the county.

Mrs. Norman Smith.

Mrs. Norman Smith, mother of Mr. A. A. Smith, Orangeville Manager for the Bell Telephone Co., passed away at her home in Mount Forest on Sunday, May 10th, shortly after an operation for the removal of a malignant internal growth. Deceased, who was a daughter of the late Jacob Mosmer, was in her 66th year and had been a life-resident of Mount Forest and vicinity. She was highly respected as a worthy, good-living woman and her sad death is deeply regretted by all who knew her. She is survived by a family of four sons and three daughters—Mrs. Stone, Mrs. Payne and Chas. Smith, of Battle Creek, Mich.; John Smith of Joliet, Mich.; Mrs. F. Wertz, of Cadillac, Mich.; Mr. A. A. Smith, Orangeville, and Miss Dolly at home. Two brothers and two sisters also survive.

Mrs. George Kinsley

Lucy Olivo Holmes, wife of Mr. George Kinsley, lot 31, con. 4, Amaranth, passed away on Friday, May 8th, after a short illness from pneumonia. Deceased was in her 69th year and is survived by her husband, and a family of four sons and three daughters. The members of the family are Nathaniel and George Kinsley, of Mono, Joseph and James Kinsley, of Amaranth, Mrs. Thos. Horner, Mono Centre, Mrs. John McDonald, Amaranth, and Mrs. Devine, in New York State. Mr. and Mrs. Kinsley lived in Mono until about four years ago, when they removed to Amaranth. They were among the early settlers of Mono and shared in the arduous experiences that fall to the lot of pioneers in this country. The funeral, which was largely attended, was held to Shelburne cemetery on the following Sunday afternoon.

A Tossorontio Pioneer.

Mr. Joseph Kidd, a pioneer settler of Tossorontio township, passed away on Tuesday, May 5th, at his home on lot 22, con. 1, where he had lived upwards of fifty years. Deceased, who was highly respected by the community in which he had spent so many years, was born at Mono Mills 83 years ago. He was a member of the Anglican Church, a Conservative in politics and had been identified with the Orange Order for over sixty years. Mrs. Kidd died in 1904. The surviving members of the family are:—Elijah, Deputy-reeve of Mulmur; Mrs. Moore, wife of ex-Warden Moore, of Simcoe County; Mrs. George Wilson, Lisle; Mrs. Bowers, Little Current, and George on the homestead. The funeral, which was under the auspices of the Orange Order, was held to Christ Church cemetery, Banda, Rev. Mr. Dreyer officiating. The funeral cortege was over a mile in length.

Death of Mrs. Davison

The death of Mrs. John Davison of Whitfield, on Tuesday of last week, was a great shock to the community where she resided. Dr. S. T. White and Dr. R. E. Davis, of Shelburne, were about to perform a minor operation and Dr. Davis was getting the patient ready by administering chloroform, when she suddenly collapsed and died instantly. Artificial respiration or breathing was kept up on the patient for two hours by the two physicians but it was all to no purpose. She had never been troubled with her heart and this was the third time that Dr. White had administered an anaesthetic during his attendance on the deceased. It is the general opinion among medical men that it is impossible to tell by examination whether a patient's heart is capable of standing chloroform or not. This opinion is backed up by the highest medical authorities. Statistics show that in the years 1911-12-13 in England and Wales there were 700 deaths during the administration of anaesthetics. 390 of these took place just at the beginning as in this case and the cause of death was attributed largely to fear or fright. It was a very sad affair and the bereaved friends have the sympathy of all in their great trouble. The deceased lady spent nearly all her life at Whitfield and no one was more highly esteemed. She is survived by her bereaved husband, five sons and two daughters. The sons are Lewis Davison, of the Ontario Dental College, Toronto; Geo. Davison, of Victoria College, who has charge of a mission at Charlton, New Ontario; and William, Albert and Walter, at home. The daughters are Mrs. Wm. Ferris, Violet Hill, and Miss Ena Davison, at home. The funeral was held on Friday afternoon to the Methodist cemetery, Whitfield, and was largely attended by old friends and neighbors.—Free Press.

W. A. Graham, an ex-councillor of Clinton, and for many years reeve of Stanley township, died of heart trouble, aged 74.

On Victoria Day, May 25, L.O.L. No. 63, Mono Road, will hold an Irish evening in Hanton's hall, Caledon East.

HELD BACK BY DEADLY ANAEMIA

Thousands of Growing Girls Yearly Fall into a Hopeless Decline

Anaemia—the doctor's name for bloodlessness—holds back many girls from the path of bright, healthy womanhood. At that all-important time when their veins should be full of rich, red blood, anaemia, creeping on them stealthily, robs them of sparkling eyes and a clear skin. They become languid and exhausted at the least exertion, their backs ache, their hearts palpitate violently, appetite fails, and their complexion changes to a pasty yellow, or they become deathly white. No medicine ever offered the public has bestowed such important benefits upon anaemic girls as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They build up the body anew by making the rich, red blood that gives splendid health, bright eyes, a clear complexion and womanly brightness. Here is an instance out of many recorded thousands. Miss Delina Arsenault, Urbainville, P.E.I., says: "I suffered from an attack of anaemia which my friends feared at one time would prove fatal. I grew thinner every day, had dark circles around my eyes, could not sleep well at night and got up in the morning feeling tired and depressed. I suffered severely from headaches and pains in the back and limbs. I had to leave school, and was unable to do any work around the house. I had no appetite and frequently vomited what I did eat. I was under a doctor's care for eight months, but was growing worse and worse, and was almost in despair, when a friend advised me to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial. Anxious to get well, I decided to do so. After taking a few boxes I found a good improvement, and I continued taking the Pills until I had used nine boxes, when I was again enjoying perfect health, and I found on weighing myself that I had gained seventeen pounds. I have since enjoyed perfect health, for which I have to thank Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and strongly advise all other ailing girls to give this medicine a fair trial."

Every girl afflicted with anaemia, every woman who suffers from backaches and sideaches, and the other miseries that afflict her sex can secure new health and strength through a fair use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Blood was like Water

Was given up to die of Anaemia by two doctors

A Letter of Unusual Interest Describes this Remarkable Cure

You will learn by reading this letter how medical doctors knock proprietary medicines and try to keep people from using them and learning of their value.

This letter also shows how medicines of proven merit often cure the most complicated cases after doctors had given up hope. In this case two doctors said Mr. Hyndman could not get better, and, in fact, he daily grew weaker so long as he followed their treatment. This is a remarkable victory for Dr. Chase's Medicines and you will find the details of the case interesting.

Mr. T. Hyndman, Farmer, Rupert, Que., writes:—"I had been gradually failing in health for two years and tried many remedies, among others I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and found them doing me good. Some neighbors told me the Doctors said they were dangerous so I quit their use and went to the doctor. Under his treatment I got so weak I was unable to raise my head from the pillow, and he told me that I had Anaemia of the blood and could never be better again, so I sent for another doctor and he told me the same. I could not take their medicine and was continually vomiting, so I gave them up and said 'kill or cure I will again try Dr. Chase's medicines.'

I used altogether fourteen boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and six boxes Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and now I can work from six o'clock in the morning until seven at night and I don't poke at it either. Any man that works a farm knows what kind of a job it is. I honestly believe that I owe my life to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and Pills, and I praise them everywhere I go. Many of the people here use them to keep the system in good condition and prevent disease."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has no rival as a means of enriching the blood and building up the system. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto. Write for booklet.

HE TAMES WILD GEESE.

Jack Miner, maker of red tile and first friend of wild geese, is a farmer over in Essex, with a farm and a brickyard just two miles north on Lake Erie on the turnpike that leads to Kingsville. A hale bronzed man of out-of-doors, he spends endless hours watching his pet squirrels, his fancy pheasants and the wild bird life that makes his thickets sing in summer, says a Detroit paper.

In 1908 Jack Miner bought nine wild geese that had been trapped alive. He placed them and corn out in the fields and eleven other wild geese came. The next spring he again spread lunch in the fields for the game birds and thirty-two came. Now every spring the wild geese tarry on their north journey spending six or seven weeks with Jack Miner. He feeds them five or six bushels of corn a day, bringing the feast nearer his house each day. This week his yards are thick with wild geese. They spend the nights talking of many things as they sail majestically in the dark on the bosom of Lake Erie. Each morning they came back to the Miner lands, for they have grown to know that there they will find food and protection and understanding.

Thousands of them there are, and each year more. The country folk and the city people come from afar to see the fowl and look upon the strange man who attracts and holds them. And Miner—he superintends the spreading of the daily banquet. Once in a while he picks up a wounded bird and takes it to his hospital.

Miner is a clean man—a man who finds much to admire and love in the sleek, proud aristocrats of the air who come to visit him. The farmers whereabouts are inclined to scoff and compute on avaricious fingers the number of hogs five bushels of corn a day will feed; Miner, far from the hot masonry of the city, with one leg thrown over a gate and his feathered guests hissing contentedly in the artificial ponds built for them with much labor, is very close to the hill tops. His is the great achievement, beside which most of our puny business affairs dwarf into pitiful insignificance.

It's a fine thing to cause so much wild enthusiasm among the geese in the south in winter—the excited whisperings of the flocks as they fly north. It must be wonderful news that is passed from one flying wedge to another that leagues and leagues above the Gulf, set in the arm of the Great Lakes, is a bit of hallowed ground where a great silent man with a great heart is waiting to feed and protect the travellers.

Victor Inglis, son of W. A. Inglis, proprietor of the mill at Inglis Falls, four miles from Owen Sound, was returning home from town on a motor cycle when the machine got beyond his control. It crashed into the bridge close to the falls throwing the young man over the railing into the water close to the brink of the cataract. He was saved from certain death by mill employees, when about to be swept over in the rush of water.

Crossed Valentines

They Brought a Surprise on the Good Saint's Day

BY CLARISSA MACKIE

"If I had known you could be so hateful!" Milly Telford had sobbed.

"If I had only known you had such a waspish temper!" Harry Blake had hotly retorted.

And that was the beginning of the few bitter words that ended their engagement.

So Milly hastened to pack her trunk and run away to Fern Hollow, where her Aunt Amelia Telford lived the quiet, uneventful days of a New England spinster.

"Broken your engagement to Harry Blake?" echoed Aunt Amelia when Milly had made confession.

"Yes," sighed Milly. "And, Aunt Amelia, I'm so thankful that I discovered my mistake in time!"

"I hope, dear, that you won't regret it," said Aunt Amelia, with a troubled expression in her sweet blue eyes.

"I never shall! And, Aunt Amelia," added Milly brightly, "I'm never going to marry. I'm going to spend my days a happy, care free spinster like you!"

Aunt Amelia went away without a word, and if Milly had followed she would have seen the little woman looking wistfully across the valley at the red chimneys of an old graystone house set against the wintry hillsides. If she had had more faith in the lover of her youth that graystone house would have been her home today.

"Poor child—poor foolish child!" she murmured sadly, and one could not tell whether she pitied her niece Milly or the spirit of her own lost youth.

* * * * * * *

The window of the little stationery shop was gay with love missives. They hung from wires in long strings or were fixed cunningly in place by hidden props at the back.

Valentines, valentines, everywhere. They cluttered the glass showcases and were festooned overhead in a riot of alluring color.

Outside it was snowing fast, and Milly Telford in her scarlet coat and knitted cap made a brilliant flash of color as she ran up the steps of Mr. Ware's shop and opened the door.

AMELIA READ THE LINES OVER AND OVER.

Mr. Ware, having dismissed his last customer, hurried forward to meet her.

"I want some drawing pencils, please," said Milly, approaching the glass case.

"Valentines!"

Milly's breath came faster as the tender missives stared her in the face. "I forgot it was St. Valentine's day," she murmured, with an odd little laugh.

"When I was a young man girls didn't forget St. Valentine's day," said Mr. Ware reprovingly.

Milly laughed lightly. "There are so many things to think about," she apologized. Then, having purchased her pencils, she lingered, looking over the valentines. If she had not quarreled with Harry—why, she would undoubtedly be selecting a valentine for him and he would send her some ridiculously sweet remembrance of the day and she would pretend that she could not guess the sender.

"It isn't too late to buy some now, Miss Milly," wheedled Mr. Ware across the counter. "'Tain't Valentine's day till tomorrow."

"I'll take some of these cute little hearts," said Milly. "I've quite forgotten my sister's children."

While Mr. Ware slipped the hearts into envelopes ready for direction, Milly hovered over a dainty satin valentine on which was painted a wreath of forgetmenots, and within the wreath was a verse lettered in gold:

Though bitter pride holds us apart,
Thy image lingers in my heart.

It seemed to be a verse written for estranged lovers. Milly Telford's heart beat quickly as she took out her purse and paid for the white satin valentine. She evaded Mr. Ware's kindly, quizzical glance as she hastened from the place. Up in her own little room at Aunt Amelia's Milly examined the valentine once more before inclosing it in its box and wrapping it securely.

At last it lay before her, a dainty package wrapped in white paper. She carried it into the spare bedroom where on the old fashioned writing desk Aunt Amelia kept her writing materials.

Milly smiled a little as she lighted the candle and heated the stick of red sealing wax. Aunt Amelia's ivory handled seal was there, and Milly used it, afterward holding the clear cut impression to the light. Against the red wax was the impression of a sailing ship tossing on a stormy sea; underneath in tiny letters it read, "Such is life."

Then in a laboriously disguised hand Milly wrote Harry Blake's name with some of Aunt Amelia's violet ink. "I will address it to the house; he will surely receive it then," murmured Amelia, blushing hotly.

* * * * * * *

It was Miss Amelia Telford's morning custom to walk demurely down the village street and call at the postoffice for her mail and then do her marketing for the day. St. Valentine's day was no exception to the rule, and when Miss Amelia walked up the prim path to her front door she carried a handful of letters and newspapers. Milly was waiting with thinly disguised impatience in the cozy sitting room.

"Any mail for me, Aunt Amelia?" she asked.

"Yes; a box of candy from some one," laughed Amelia.

Milly snatched up the big box of sweets, and the look of eager anticipation died from her face as she scanned the address.

"Oh! It's only from Billy Wakeman," she said carelessly, pushing it aside.

Amelia removed her cloak and hat and sat down to look over the mail that had come to her. She read several letters with quiet enjoyment, then picked up a large square white missive heavily embossed.

"A valentine for me!" she cried, with gentle excitement. She carefully opened the envelope with her embroidery scissors and drew out a large white satin heart, on which was painted a smaller heart of forgetmenots. In the center of the small heart was a verse in gold lettering:

Though bitter pride holds us apart,
Thy image lingers in my heart.

Amelia read the lines over and over with trembling lips that refused to utter more than a whisper. Then she bowed her head, where the crinkled bronze tresses were mingled with a powdering of white, and she wept softly.

Milly crept to her and listened to the old story of a lovers' quarrel extending over many years, and now of the valentine which had come as an olive branch of peace from her old lover.

"It was so unexpected, my dear," sobbed Aunt Amelia. "I never expected to hear from Henry Blake again."

"Henry Blake?" echoed Milly, picking up the embossed envelope and scanning the address. She knew the bold masculine hand that had penned the words, giving her the formal name by which she had been christened as Aunt Amelia's namesake:

"Miss Amelia Telford, Fern Hollow, N. H."

That was Aunt Amelia's name too! How funny that her aunt should have thought the valentine was for her—from her old sweetheart! Of course it was for the young Milly, from Harry himself!

"Just fancy one valentine doing for two of us!" thought Milly ecstatically. Then, with sudden thought, she added:

"You said his name was Henry Blake, Aunt Amelia?"

Amelia lifted her tear wet eyes; she was smiling happily. "His name is Henry Blake, and he is your Harry Blake's uncle. Of course I never told you that I knew him when he lived in the old stone house across the valley. I never expected this!" She was holding the valentine close to her heart.

"How odd!" breathed Milly incredulously. "And Harry lives with his Uncle Henry; you know; they keep bachelors' hall in the most delightful apartment—and, dear, there is the doorbell."

Milly flew to the front door to admit the tall, dignified form of Mr. Henry Blake. "Why, Milly!" he cried cordially, clasping her hand. "I—er—came—er"— Milly saw that in one hand he carried a flat package wrapped in white paper with broken red seals.

"You came to see Aunt Amelia," smiled Milly, as she pushed him toward the sitting room door. "I know all about it," she nodded wisely.

"You do?" he laughed. "Then you can see that I recognized Amelia's seal and her violet ink. But that rascal Harry fought to the last ditch that it was intended for him. This duplicating family names is a nuisance."

"It's a blessing in disguise sometimes," giggled Milly as he disappeared within the sitting room.

Ten minutes later Milly was in the village drug store talking over the telephone to Harry Blake in New York.

"Did you send me a valentine, Harry?" she asked, and when he answered in the affirmative she told him enough of the story to bring him down to Fern Hollow by the next train.

Conspicuous among the wedding presents received by Mr and Mrs Harry Blake were two valentines, almost alike in design and each bearing the same trite little couplet. Attached were the cards of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Blake.

"Those valentines," explained the bride to her dearest friend, "are proof to me that St. Valentine in truth keeps a watchful eye on his people. Almost identical, they crossed each other in transit and brought happiness to four people—and that's expecting a good deal from two valentines!"

An exchange says:—"It isn't often that anyone gets ahead of a newspaper man. A burglar tried it the other night. He broke into an editor's house by mistake. The latter was awake and he watched the burglar search through various packets and drawers but of course found nothing. Just as he was about to depart the editor drawled out. "Say partner, won't you lend me a dollar?" The burglar was surprised, but appreciated the joke, tossed the editor a dollar and took his departure."

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

She walked with long, swinging steps, scorning the thought of omnibuses or the tube. If ever she felt fatigue in these long tramps which had already taken her half over London, she never admitted it. Asking her way once or twice, she passed along Fleet Street into the Strand, and crossed Trafalgar Square into Piccadilly. Here she walked more slowly, looking constantly at the notices in shop windows. One she entered and met with a sharp rebuff, which she appeared to receive unmoved. But when she reached the pavement outside her teeth clenched, and she carried herself unconsciously an inch or so higher. It was just then that she came face to face with Nigel Ennison.

He was walking listlessly along, well-dressed, debonnair, good-looking. Directly he saw Anna he accosted her. His manner was deferential, even eager. Anna, who was disposed to be sharply critical, could find no fault with it.

"How fortunate I am, Miss Pellissier! All day I have been hoping that I might run across you. You got my note?"

"I certainly received a note," Anna admitted.

"You were going to answer it?"

"Certainly not!" she said deliberately.

He looked at her with an expression of comical despair.

"What have I done, Miss Pellissier?" he pleaded. "We were good friends in Paris, weren't we? You made all sorts of promises, we planned no end of nice things, and then—without a word to any one you disappeared. Now we meet again, and you will scarcely look at me. You seem altogether altered, too. Upon my word—you are Miss Pellissier, aren't you?"

"I certainly am," she admitted.

He looked at her for a moment in a puzzled sort of way.

"Of course!" he said. "You have changed somehow—and you certainly are less amiable."

She laughed. After all, his was a pleasant face, and a pleasant voice, and very likely Annabel had behaved badly.

"Perhaps," she said, "it is the London climate. It depresses one, you know."

He nodded.

"You look more like your old self when you smile," he remarked. "But, forgive me, you are tired. Won't you come and have some tea with me? There is a new place in Bond Street," he hastened to say, "where everything is very well done, and they give us music, if that is any attraction to you."

She hesitated and looked for a moment straight into his eyes. He certainly bore inspection. He was tall and straight and his expression was good.

"I will come with pleasure," she said, "if you will promise to treat me as a new acquaintance—not to refer to—Paris—at all."

"I promise," he said heartily. "Allow me."

He took his place by her side, and they talked lightly of London, the shops and people. They found a cosy little table in the tea-rooms, and everything was delicious. Anna, with her marvellous capacity for enjoyment, ate cakes and laughed, and forgot that she had tea an hour or so ago at an A.B.C., or that she had a care in the world.

"By-the-bye," he said, presently, "your sister was married to old Ferringhall the other day, wasn't she? I saw the notice in the papers."

Anna never flinched. But after the first shock came a warm glow of relief. After all, it was what she had been praying for—and Annabel could not have known her address.

"My sister and I," she said slowly, "have seen very little of each other lately. I fancy that Sir John does not approve of me."

Ennison shrugged his shoulders.

"Sort of man who can see no further than his nose," he remarked contemptuously. "Fearful old fogey! I can't imagine any sister of yours putting up with him for a moment. I thought perhaps you were staying with them, as you did not seem particularly anxious to recognize your old friends."

Anna shook her head.

"No, I am alone," she answered.

"Then we must try and make London endurable for you," he remarked cheerfully. "What night will you dine and go to the theatre with me?—and how about Hurlington on Saturday?"

Anna shook her head.

"Thank you," she said coolly. "Those things are not for me just at present."

He was obviously puzzled. Anna sighed as she reflected that her sister had simply revelled in her indiscretions.

"Come," he said, "you can't be meaning to bury yourself. There must be something we can do. What do you say to Brighton——"

Anna looked at him quietly—and he never finished his sentence.

"May I ask whether you are staying with friends in town?" he inquired deferentially. "Perhaps your engagements are made for you."

"I am staying," she answered coolly, "at a small boarding house near Russell Square."

He dropped his eyeglass with a clatter.

"At a boarding house?" he gasped.

She nodded.

"Yes. I am an independent sort of a person," she continued, "and I am engaged in an attempt to earn my own living. You don't happen to know of any one, I suppose, who wants a nursery governess, or a clerk—without shorthand—or a tryer-on, or a copyist, or——"

"For Heaven's sake stop, Miss Pellissier," he interrupted. "What a hideous repertoire! If you are in earnest about wanting to earn money, why on earth don't you accept an engagement here?"

"An engagement?" she queried.

"On the stage? Yes. You would not have the slightest difficulty."

She laughed softly to herself.

"Do you know," she confessed, "I never thought of that?"

He looked at her as though doubting even now whether she could possibly be in earnest.

"I cannot conceive," he said, "how any other occupation could ever have occurred to you. You do not need me to remind you of your success at Paris. The papers are continually wondering what has become of 'Alcide.' Your name alone would fill any music hall in London."

Again that curious smile which puzzled him so much parted her lips for a moment.

"Dear me," she said, "I fancy you exaggerate my fame. I can't imagine Londoners—particularly interested in me."

He shrugged his shoulders. Even now he was not at all sure that she was not playing with him. There were so many things about her which he could not understand. She began to draw on her gloves thoughtfully.

"I am very much obliged for the tea," she said. "This is a charming place, and I have enjoyed the rest."

"It was a delightful piece of good fortune that I should have met you," he answered. "I hope that whatever your plans may be, you will give me the opportunity of seeing something of you now and then."

"I am afraid," she said, preceding him down the narrow stairs, "that I am going to be too busy to have much time for gadding about. However, I dare say that we shall come across one another before long."

"That is provokingly indefinite," he answered, a little ruefully. "Won't you give me your address?"

She shook her head.

"It is such a very respectable boarding house," she said. "I feel quite sure that Mrs. White would not approve of callers."

"I have a clue at any rate," he remarked, smiling. "I must try the Directory."

"I wish you good luck," she answered. "There are a good many Whites in London."

"May I put you in a hansom?" he asked, lifting his stick.

"For Heaven's sake, no," she answered quickly. "Do you want to ruin me? I shall walk back."

"I may come a little way, then?" he begged.

"If you think it worth while," she answered doubtfully.

Apparently he thought it very much worth while. Restraining with an effort his intense curiosity he talked of general subjects only, trying his best to entertain her. He succeeded so well that they were almost in Montague street before Anna stopped short.

"Heavens!" she exclaimed "I have brought you very nearly to my door. Go back at once, please."

He held out his hand obediently.

"I'll go," he said, "but I warn you that I shall find you out."

For a moment she was grave.

"Well," she said, "I may be leaving where I am in a few days, so very likely you will be no better of."

He looked at her intently.

"Miss Pellissier," he said, "I don't understand this change in you. Every word you utter puzzles me. I have an idea that you are in some sort of trouble. Won't you let me—can't I be of any assistance?"

He was obviously in earnest. His tone was kind and sympathetic.

"You are very good," she said. "Indeed I shall not forget your offer. But just now there is nothing which you or anybody can do. Good-bye."

He was dismissed and he understood it. Anna crossed the street, and letting herself in at No. 13 with a latchkey went humming lightly up to her room. She was in excellent spirits, and it was not until she had taken off her hat, and was considering the question of dinner or no dinner, that she remembered that another day had passed, and she was not a whit nearer being able to pay her to-morrow's bill.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Puzzlement of Nigel Ennison.

Nigel Ennison walked towards his club the most puzzled man in London. There could not, he decided, possibly be two girls so much alike. Besides, she had admitted her identity. And yet,—he thought of the supper party where he had met Annabel Pellissier, the stories about her, his own few minutes' whispered love making! He was a self-contained young man, but his cheeks grew hot at the thought of the things which it had seemed quite natural to say to her then, but which he knew very well would have been instantly resented by the girl whom he had just left. He went over her features one by one in his mind. They were the same. We could not doubt it. There was the same airy grace of movement, the same deep brown hair and alabaster skin. He found himself thinking up all the psychology which he had ever read. Was this the result of some strange experiment? It was the person of Annabel Pellissier—the soul of a very different order of being.

He spent the remainder of the afternoon looking for a friend whom he found at last in the billiard room of one of the smaller clubs to which he belonged. After the usual laconic greetings, he drew him on one side.

"Fred," he said, "do you remember taking me to dinner at the Ambassador's, one evening last September, to meet a girl who was singing there? Hamilton and Drummond and his lot were with us."

"Of course," his friend answered. "La belle Aloide, wasn't it? Annabel Pellissier was her real name. Jolly nice girl, too."

Ennison nodded.

"I thought I saw her in town today," he said. "Do you happen to know whether she is supposed to be here?"

"Very likely indeed," Captain Fred Meddoes answered, lighting a cigarette. "I heard that she had chucked her show at the French places and gone in for a reform all round. Sister's got married to that bounder Ferringhall."

Ennison took an easy chair.

"What a little bricks!" he murmured. "She must have character. It's no half reform either. What do you know about her, Fred? I am interested."

Meddoes turned round from the table on which he was practising shots, and shrugged his shoulders.

"Not much," he answered, "and yet about all there is to be known, I fancy. There were two sisters, you know. Old Jersey and Hampshire family, the Pellissiers, and a capital stock, too, I believe."

"Any one could see that the girls were ladies," Ennison murmured.

"No doubt about that," Meddoes continued. "The father was in the army, and got a half-pay job at St. Heliers. Died short, I suppose, and the girls had to shift for themselves. One went in for painting, kept straight and married old Ferringhall a week or so ago—the Lord help her. The other kicked over the traces a bit, made rather a hit with her singing at some of the French places, and went the pace in a mild, lady-like sort of way. Cheveney was looking after her, I think, then. If she's over, he probably knows all about it."

"So Cheveney was her friend, you think, eh?" he remarked.

"No doubt about that, I fancy," Meddoes answered lightly. "He ran some Austrian fellow off. She was quite the rage, in a small way, you know. Strange, demure-looking young woman, with wonderful complexion and eyes, and a style about her, too. Care for a hundred up?"

Ennison shook his head.

"Can't stop, thanks," he answered. "See you to-night, I suppose?"

He sauntered off.

"I'm damned if I'll believe it," he muttered to himself savagely.

But for the next few days he avoided Cheveney like the plague.

* * * * * * *

The same night he met Meddoes and Drummond together, the latter over from Paris on a week's leave from the Embassy.

"Odd thing," Meddoes remarked, "we were just talking about the Pellissier girl. Drummond was telling me about the way old Ferringhall pounded upon them all at the club."

"Sounds interesting," Ennison remarked. "May I hear?"

"It really isn't much to tell," Drummond answered. "You know what a fearful old prig Ferringhall is, always goes about as though the whole world were watching him? We tried to show him around Paris, but he wouldn't have any of it. Talked about his years, his position and his constituents, and always sneaked off back to his hotel just when the fun was going to begin. Well one night, some of us saw him, or thought we saw him, at a cafe dining with 'Alcide,'—as a matter of fact, it seems that it was her sister. He came into the club the next day, and of course we went for him thick. Jove, he didn't take it kindly, I can tell you. Stood on his dignity and shut up up in great style. It seems that he was a sort of family friend of the Pellissiers, and it was the artist sister whom he was with. The joke of it is that he's married her now, and cuts me dead."

"I suppose," Ennison said, "the likeness between the sisters must be rather exceptional?"

"I never saw the goody-goody one close to, so I can't say," Drummond answered. "Certainly I was a little off at the cafe, and she had a hat and veil on, but I could have sworn that it was 'Alcide.'"

"Is 'Alcide' still in Paris?" Ennison asked.

"Don't think so," Drummond answered. "I heard the other day that she'd been taken in by some cad of a fellow who was cutting a great dash in Paris, personating Meysey Hill, the great railway man. Anyhow, she's disappeared for some reason or other. Perhaps Ferringhall has pensioned her off. He's the sort of Johnny who wouldn't care about having a sister-in-law on the loose."

Ennison here thought he saw her in London," Meddoes remarked.

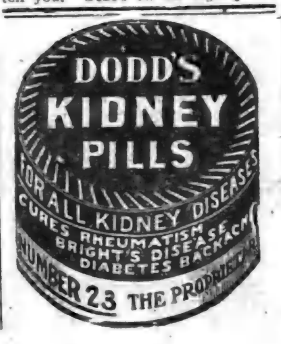
FREE OF ALL THREE DISEASES

"Fruit-a-tives" Brought Him Perfect Health

AVON, ONT., May 14th, 1913.

"I am younger since I have been taking "Fruit-a-tives". I was troubled very badly with Piles, Constipation and Stomach Disorder, but I found "Fruit-a-tives" was the panacea for the whole three.



Now I am free of all these diseases and enjoying perfect health, and able to work whenever I like. Five years ago, I started taking "Fruit-a-tives". I took two every night and they worked wonders for me.

No other medicine I could get was so good and I took lots of different remedies before I found out how good "Fruit-a-tives" were.

I keep "Fruit-a-tives" on hand all the time, and am never without them. I even take them with me when I go motoring, so I can have them handy. "Fruit-a-tives" are worthy of every good word I can say about them. The fact that they cured me of Piles, was something to be everlastingly thankful for"

Bargain-Hunters

In this community are hundreds of individuals and families on the watch for an advertisement which will offer them what they want at an advantageous price.

Call them bargain-hunters, if you will, but there is nothing wrong in waiting for a bargain, especially when the seller is anxious to sell at a reduced price.

One family wants a new carpet—the need is not urgent. Another family is looking forward to buying a set of dining-room furniture—it may not be for a twelve month.

A NOTE TO MERCHANTS

Stimulate business by the offer of some slow-moving lines at special prices. Brighten up business by advertising some desirable goods at reduced prices. Make advertising banish dull business. Often you can tempt the buyer who is biding his or her time, to buy from you—at a time of your naming.

Owen Sound Police Get After Armenian Collectors.

Probably the Men Who Made the Rounds in Orangeville a Few Weeks Ago.

The following clipping from last week's issue of The Owen Sound Sun will interest citizens who opened their hearts and purses to the Armenian collectors who made the rounds of Orangeville two or three weeks ago :—

Have a number of the business men on Front street again been humbugged by a crowd of smooth foreigners who camped in Owen Sound the latter part of last week and collected a considerable amount of money supposed to be for an Orphan's Home in Armenia? There is every indication that this is a fact and that some of the citizens have been the victims of one of the coolest swindles that has been perpetrated on an unsuspecting public for a long time. Fortunately their little money-making fraud was queered before they had time to bamboozle all the business section and the swarthy, "reverend" humbugs, who were masquerading in clerical garb, folded their tents like the Arabs and silently stole away." The Sun learned that they left Saturday afternoon for either Meaford or Collingwood to practice their pious imposition on the unsuspecting citizens of those towns.

The Owen Sound part of the game started on Wednesday night when two members of the party arrived on the late Grand Trunk train and put up at the Comely House. They were dressed in clerical garb with long black coats and black felt hats and spoke broken English. They signed their names on the hotel register but, as far as deciphering the scribble went, well—the feat was beyond even the capabilities of a newspaper man. On Thursday, anothee tawny complexioned individual calling himself the Reverend Cross George with pointed whiskers and clerical raiment also came in by the Grand Trunk. The latter was evidently field marshall of the party and the other two did not stir out much until the arrival of the Rev. George. Friday's C.P.R. train brought reinforcements in the shape of two more revenend canvassers, one of them calling himself Rev. Nesan Sawa. In the meantime, the canvass of the town was commenced and on Saturday morning everything was running smoothly and the swarthy reverends were raking in the coin with many "God bless you's" and other oriental salaams. They travelled in pairs, four of them doing the scouting, while the fifth, a tall, uneasy looking individual, evidently the director of ceremonies, remained in his room at the hotel, smoked cigarettes and reported occasionlly to headquarters by long distance phone.

Saturday forenoon brought disaster. Two of the party had been operating in Markdale and a Markdale citizen, who had become suspicious, sent word to Owen Sound, with the result that the police took a hand in the fun. Just as the Rev. George and his shifty-eyed assistant came out of a business place on front street, Constables Foster and Thompson intercepted them and asked for a show down of their credentials. They produced several documents supposed to be from civic and religious authorities, one of them signed by the Bishop of Montreal, stating the cause was one worthy of support and that the men were Christian gentlemen, etc. The police then asked them to produce a receipt to show that the money had reached Armenia. This resulted in the production of a post-office order receipt for $100 showing that the money had been sent to George Sawa, General Delivery, New York city. Questioned by the police as to how the money finally reached the poor little Armenian orphans, it was explained very volubly that Sawa took the money over to Armenia personally. Further than the glib assurances of the Rev. George, there was no evidence to show that this was so, and that particular money could be traced no furthar than New York. As their credentials were decidedly unsatisfactory to the police, the latter warned the suspicious clericals that they would make further investigations and if they were found to be imposters, it would go hard with them.

Whether there is an Armenian proverb to the effect that discretion is the better part of valour is not certain, but at any rate the dusky quintette paid up their bill at the hotel at noon and departed for greener pastures in the direction of Meaford. The Sun learned that, before coming to Owen Sound, they had been operating in Dundalk, Markdale, Chartsworth and also in Chesley and other towns down the G.T.R.

Inquiries at the hotel revealed the fact that the party held nightly consultations lasting until two and three o'clock in the morning, an unearthly hour for a respectable Canadian, let alone a pious and devout Armenian, and during these nightly seances, they smoked fat cigars and cigarettes innumerable, the need of the poor little Armenian orphans notwithstanding.

It is about time a halt were called on such a bunch of fakirs and that the public refused to be fleeced by every smooth imposter that comes along. Every citizen has a channel through his church organizations to contribute to deserving missionary enterprises and he may be certain that any other collector who comes along, who can show no connection with an authorized missionary project, is an imposter. It might be a good idea for the town council to pass a by-law compelling all collectors to take out a license before commencing their canvassing operations. In the meantime Owen Sound is well rid of her recent swarthy visitors.

The foreigners also paid a visit to Markdale. Commenting upon the matter the Standard says :—

"Not all the money collected is going to that far-off mission school, however, as evidenced by the number of cigarettes the pair smoked while on some of the back streets and at the depot. Baron Munchausen had nothing on one of them, either, as while "doing" the residential section of the town he informed the lady of the house that he had not canvassed the business section, although this had been done thoroughly a couple of hours previously. By this falsehood he managed, in some cases, to get two contributions from the one family. Contributors to individual or independent missionary schemes should have absolute proof that the appeal is genuine before responding to these requests for assistance. There are too many rogues traversing the country soliciting aid for foreign missions, the subscribed funds for which go no farther than the rapacious pockets of the canvassers. It's a case for the police."

LABELED BY CARLYLE.

The Tag He Plastered Upon a Famous English Historian.

In the "Letters of Charles Eliot Norton" is this amusing epistle, which was written by Norton in 1873:

The other day Froude said to me: "It's a great shame that some one shouldn't keep a record of Carlyle's talk. He never fails to say something memorable or admirably humorous. Why, he called somebody the other day 'an inspired red herring.'"

"Pray," said I, "who is it that deserves such a label?" But Froude had forgotten. • • • Some days afterward I asked Carlyle to whom he had applied the phrase, but he had forgotten and said he trusted he was not to be made accountable for all the extravagant phrases he had uttered in talk—there would be "verra many to rise in judgment" against him—but he wouldn't disown "the inspired red herring."

I told all this to Forster, abusing Froude at the same time, much to Carlyle's amusement, which was increased when Forster broke out: "By heavens, my dear Norton, I heard that previous utterance, but I, too, have forgotten to whom it was fitted. Mrs. Forster will remember." But when we went to the drawing room Mrs. Forster could not remember, and Forster called down wrath on her and himself. The next morning the post brought me a note from him at breakfast time, which contained only the name Henry Thomas Buckle.

ENGLAND'S BLACK MEN.

They Are Remnants of the Ancient Blue Painted Britons.

Practically every Englishman is Anglo-Saxon by blood, but there still are, according to scientists, one or two corners in England where there are colonies directly descended from the ancient Britons, the blue painted men who, according to the history books, inhabited England before the Anglo-Saxons killed them off.

If you came across them you would at once notice something curious about them. They do not look like Englishmen at all. They are short, as swarthy as Spaniards, with very narrow heads and with curiously cut profiles.

There are whole villagefuls of these modern ancient Britons, though the villages are very few and very out of the way. It is this out of the wayness that has kept them so distinct from the country people around them.

Some of these villages have not even had road communication with the rest of the world till comparatively recent times.

One of these curious colonies is at Dunsfold, in Surrey, Bedfordshire, too, has some villages of "black men."—London Tit-Bits.

Ventilation of Schools.

Writer in Engineering Magazine Advises That Cotton Cloth be Used in Windows.

There are few subjects in which people ought to be more interested than ventilation, whether of houses or of schools. The health of families and of pupils depends on the admission of fresh air into our rooms at all times. Of late years we have found great benefit from the practice of camping out and living in tents, into which the air is admitted by night and day. Yet, for hundreds of years civilized people have agreed to use glass windows, which, although they admit the light, sometimes too frequently, exclude the air.

In the Engineering Magazine, Mr. John B. Todd advises the substitution of cotton cloth for glass in the ventilation of schools. He claims that this will do away with draughts on the one hand and stuffiness on the other. We can all prove the truth or the falsehood of this contention by experiments in our own houses. This is the description of what is a very interesting and may prove a very useful experiment :

"The interior design of our schoolrooms seems to be that of a lineal descendant of the monastery—an interior hall, dark, and filled with a bad odor, while opening from it are lateral cells or classrooms, but no means have been found to keep them full of fresh, sweet air. Buildings fitted with apparatus that is supposed to be capable of delivering eighteen cubic feet of air per pupil per minute are full of stuffiness, the children are restless, there is hacking and coughing.

In our rigorous northern climate, the first thought is to provide a sufficient protection from the winter cold, the second requirement is to provide a well-lighted room, and we fill the side wall with glass which furnishes the light, but this same sidewall of glass prevents proper ventilation, because glass is the greatest radiator of heat known, and it chills the bad air so rapidly that sufficient good air cannot be furnished to ventilate the rooms properly, while the hall and coat rooms are filled with stale, dead air and dust. The problem is to introduce a sufficient quantity of fresh air into a warm room to make it hygienic and, at the same time, to avoid draughts. Draughts in a room are currents of air with velocity enough to be perceived, and if such air is cold, they are uncomfortable. So the problem is to introduce cold air, but of a very low velocity. If of a very low velocity, there must be a large inlet to get sufficient volume.

"An experiment was tried out last year in a modern 16-room school with a registration of 750. It is equipped with a fan which forces hot air into the room; there are also steam-heated pipes along the outside walls under the windows. During school hours the windows and doors are closed to keep the ventilating system in working order. The school room in question had five windows facing the east. The lower sash opening was 40 inches by 36 inches. Wooden screens were made and covered with a medium grade of unbleached cotton cloth. After they were put in place the windows were kept open during school hours. The stuffiness and odor entirely disappeared, as did all snuffing and coughing of the pupils. No more cases of fainting occurred, complaints of headaches ceased, and the pupils have done better work.

"Before school opens in the morning the janitor closes the windows and warms the room to 70 degrees by hot air from the fan. This is humidified by a steam jet in the mixing room. When school opens the windows are raised and the hot air inlet closed. The windows were open through all the days of winter, although children sit within five feet of the open window. Only on occasions of very severe winds have windows been lowered, and then only in exposed situations, and even on occasions one or more would be raised at intervals.

There are no cold draughts, the velocity of the hot air rising from the radiator pipes is greater than that of the cold air which is being slowly diffused through the screens, so that the resulting direction of the air current is onward. The screens furnish fresh air of very low velocity from a large surface (about fifty square feet in this room) with no heat loss from conduction, whereas with the windows closed, we have a large area of glass cooling the bad air—glass transmits twenty times more heat than cotton.

The slow diffusion of fresh air does not seem to cool the air in the room any more than it would be cooled by the glass if the windows were down. The janitor says that the room has been warmed as easily as it was before the screens were used. Other teachers were at first incredulous, but as they observed the improvement in work and discipline as a result of the fresh-air conditions, they had the windows in their rooms fitted with screens.

In that way the idea has spread to other schools. The public has become interested, and many pupils at the request of their parents, have been transferred from closed to fresh-air school-rooms. The teachers and pupils have learned the benefit and comfort and benefit of fresh air and the educational value of this experiment has been of much benefit to the community.

"Examinations show that the humidity in these fresh air schoolrooms is practically that of the outdoor air, while the dust under normal conditions is very materially reduced, and in some instances practically eliminated, and that the condition of the air warrants the opinions of the teachers. The result of eighteen examinations for dust in fresh-air schools, under various conditions of weather, and of the same number of examinations of closed-window school rooms in five different schools, show that the fresh-air schoolrooms have 33 per cent. less dust.

CLIMATE IS IMPROVING

CANADA'S EXTREMES OF COLD ARE MODERATING.

The Breaking Up of the Vast Prairie Lands Are Having an Appreciable Effect in the Direction of Reducing the Rigors of the Ice-Bound Winters — Drainage of Marshes a Powerful Factor.

The control of climate is evidently not merely a dream of the future but an accomplished fact.

As one would expect, some of the most interesting results in the way of artificial interference with climate are to be found in the case of those countries which have been colonized within comparatively recent times.

The breaking up of the vast prairie lands in Canada and the United States having a very radical effect upon the temperature of many districts. The experience of those who have investigated the matter goes to show that the more land is broken up and cultivated the more even is the temperature.

That great dread of the Western farmer—the summer frost-line—is being pushed further north year by year. Mr. J. Obed Smith, Assistant Superintendent of Emigration for Canada, says that twenty-five years ago in Manitoba summer frosts were expected as a natural and an inevitable event; the only question agitating the farmer's mind was whether the visitation would be severe enough to damage the crops. At the present time the question of summer frosts has become almost a tradition; for a generation the farmers have scarcely been troubled at all in this direction. It is not only in the summer (but in the winter as well) that an increase of temperature is to be noticed.

In many parts of the Dominion, especially round Winnipeg, it is common talk among the older settlers that the low temperatures with which they were so familiar in the old days are not now experienced. A steady increase in the warmth of the winters goes hand in hand with the breaking up of the prairies. This matter of bringing up the temperature by even a few degrees is much more important than may appear at first sight.

Stretching up towards the North Pole there are millions of acres of land, of which we may take the vast "tundras" of Siberia as an example. Here, owing to the marshy character of the ground, it is so thoroughly chilled that even in the height of summer it is always frozen hard within a few inches of the surface. It is admitted that if these great bog areas could be drained of their superabundant moisture a great difference in the climate of Siberia would be the outcome.

Large tracts of forest land have a definite influence on the climate of a district. In India it is known that great numbers of trees bring a cooling influence. The same effects have been observed in South America and in Africa. The fact is readily understood when it is considered that land densely covered with jungle does not get so heated as that which is fully exposed to the sun's rays.

More important is the effect of forests upon the rainfall of the district. Trees increase the humidity of the atmosphere by the evaporation of moisture from their leaves, and this will be precipitated again in showers. In many parts of the world the destruction of forests has brought about a serious shortage in the rainfall of districts. This has been so in America and in Central India. The replacing of the forests, although of course a matter of time, will in many cases restore the climate to its original condition. In some of the central provinces in India it has been observed that ten years after the reafforestation there was an increase of 20 per cent. in the rainfall. Similar results have been noticed in other parts of America.

A still more fascinating branch of the question of the artificial interference with climate is that in which naturally parched regions may be converted into serviceable tracts of land. It is true that trees do not grow in deserts because there is not sufficient rainfall for their needs. On the other hand, if it were possible to irrigate the Sahara desert and then clothe it with trees it is likely that a regular rainfall would become a feature of the climate. In India forests produced in regions so dry that cultivation was only possible after irrigation have brought about frequent rains.

The removal of stagnant water is another powerful ameliorating force on the climate. During the last few centuries there has been an immense reduction of marsh land in England. Now, as water-laden soil is always colder than dry, it is not difficult to imagine that the moistness or otherwise of a vast area of land will have a definite effect upon temperature. If damp land is artificially drained for the purposes of cultivation it seems like that a permanent alteration in climate would be the result.

This is what has actually taken place in England, for it is a proved fact the mean temperature in that country is appreciably higher than it was several hundred years ago.

A generation or so back Glaisher computed that at Greenwich the mean temperature had risen two degrees in the preceding hundred years. Certainly severe winters are less frequent than formerly, and when these do occur they are rarely experienced until after Christmas. The drier ground is able to hold the warmth of summer far into the autumn; in this way the threatening cold is diminished and kept at bay for a longer period than would otherwise be the case.

PARALYZED LIMBS.

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Honsburger, 10 Moore street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes : "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years."

Young People's Meeting

The Literary Committee furnished an interesting programme at the weekly meeting of St. Andrew's Young People's Society on Monday night. Miss G. M. Strang, Convenor of the Committee, occupied the chair. Interest centred in an instructive address by Mr. Don MacPherson on Libraries and Library Work. Mr. MacPherson spoke in a general way of the Ontario Library system, outlined the conditions upon which Carnegie grants are obtained, and then explained the system of numbering, classifying and cataloguing books in the Orangeville Public Library. Other numbers were a piano solo by Miss Alberta Kearns, a reading by Miss Fraser Dodds and a piano duet by the Misses Donaldson.

Hydro-radial railway surveyors were in Mount Forest last week.

Mrs. Alcide Charland, Ste. Sophie de Levard, Que., writes: "I am well satisfied with Baby's Own Tablets which I use for my little one during the teething period. I know of no other medicine to equal them." Mrs. Charland's testimony is that of thousands of other mothers. Once the Tablets are used a mother will give no other medicine to her little ones. The Tablets are guaranteed to be absolutely safe and are not only good during the teething period but cure constipation, colic, colds and simple fevers—in fact they cure all the minor ills of little ones. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A GROTESQUE ILLUSION.

Armaments Not Necessary to Protect Commerce and Life of Nations.

War a System of International Duelling Which Must Disappear.

At many pulpits last Sunday the pastors delivered sermons on the subject of Peace. In the evening service in St. Andrew's Church the pastor, Rev. W. M. Morris, gave an excellent synopsis of Norman Angell's well-known book, The Great Illusion, which is regarded as the most important literary contribution yet made to this subject.

The object of the book, Mr. Morris stated, was to show that the whole of Europe and for that matter the whole civilized world is laboring under a grotesque illusion. There are the gigantic systems of armaments, by which nations suppose they are protecting their commerce and their national life. There is the competitive system of preparation for possible war that is rapidly draining the force and vitality of nations. These things are unnecessary. The world is laboring under the illusion of the survival of a state of affairs which had long ceased to exist. It is an illusion based on ideas which have no relevancy to the conditions of the modern world. Within the last generation the system of European finance—and indeed world finance—has become so international and so complicated that it is no longer possible for any nation to gain by its disturbance. It is a system that requires honesty, trust and international peace instead of war and bloodshed. Under present conditions it is utterly impossible for any nation to gain by the invasion or occupation of another country. It is an illusion to think that one nation can annex the wealth of another nation. Wealth no longer consists in bullion or objects that can be carried away. It consists in securities and world-wide undertakings, the value of which depends exclusively on credit and mutual trust. The invading nation that disturbs this delicate system suffers as much as the country invaded.

Does a nation in any sense possess its colonies? Does Great Britain in any way own Canada? Canada is related to the Motherland by ties of friendship, blood-interest and sentiment, but England cannot extract money from this country, impose any taxation or dictate a policy. Can any nation command the support of its colonies in case of war unless they freely offer it? Colonies are to-day really a financial burden, because a nation feels bound to protect them. The point is that the wealth of a conquered territory must be left to the inhabitants who are the real owners.

As duelling is passing away, so must the system of international duelling disappear. The world has to learn that the interests of nations do not collide any more than do the interests of men. Finance is international, labor is becoming so and commerce eventually will.

Warfare is contrary to the teaching, spirit and purpose of Jesus Christ. The Christian nations of the world are permeated with the Christian spirit in personal life, home life, social ideals and business obligations. Why are they always preparing to fight one another? The answer lies largely in the fact that in all these countries there are men making money out of the manufacture of armaments and these exercise an influence over the press and Parliament. The love of money is the root of this as well as of all other evils. But what a mockery is offered to the Prince of Peace by His avowed followers. It is one of the ironies of history that the most deadly weapons are being made, not by the nations that owe their allegiance to Mahomet, the prophet of the sword, but by those who profess allegiance to Jesus Christ.

The objects which led Great Britain into the Boer war were:—To vindicate the supremacy of the British race in South Africa, to establish British ideals, to secure the rights of British Indians and to take the government of the country out of the hands of the Boers. The war cost $250,000,000 and many precious lives and to-day the government is in the hands of the Boers, South Africa is united and the Boer element predominates, Boer regulations are enforced against the Indians and Britain has acknowledged the Boer attitude in respect to the natives. As a matter of fact Britain won in battle but lost in the settlement.

Do we not exercise a higher form of patriotism when we wage war against the trinity of evils that are sapping the vital energy of our people than by forever getting ready to fight an imaginary enemy across the ocean. Would it not be better to train our boys for the service of humanity than for its destruction?

Norman Angell, Mr. Morris explained in closing, urges Christian nations to establish an International Court of Appeal, to which all civilized nations may belong and an international police system, which would enforce law and order in disturbed or half-civilized lands. He does not urge disarmament, or even a reduction of armaments at the present time, but rather a far-reaching reform of public opinion.

The South Simcoe Baseball League has been organized with Cookstown, Thornton, Ivy and Alliston as the competing teams.

JOSEPH THOMPSON

East Garafraxa Loses a Well-Known Resident.

Joseph Thompson, an old and widely known resident of East Garafraxa, passed away at his home in Marsville on Wednesday afternoon, May 13th. Deceased, who was in his 77th year, had been complaining of feeling poorly for the last three months, but had only been bedfast for four weeks. His death was caused by stomach trouble. During his illness everything that medical skill and loving care could suggest was done to prolong his days. The end came quietly and peacefully. The late Mr. Thompson was born in Tyrone County, Ireland, but came to Canada with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Thompson, when about 14 years of age. When a young man he followed the occupation of farmer and enjoyed a wide reputation as an expert and capable builder. When he gave up this trade, he turned his attention to farming, settling on lot 2, 13th line, where he resided until he retired and moved to Marsville a few years ago. Fifty-five years ago Mr. Thompson was married to Miss Martha Gray, a sister of Messrs. John Gray, Orangeville, and William Gray, Montreal. The marriage, which proved singularly happy, was blessed by a family of seven sons and six daughters, all of whom are living and married. Mrs. Thompson also survives, so that the death of the husband makes the first break in the family circle. The sons and daughters are:—William, of Orton; James, of Fergus; Jos., a member of the East Garafraxa council; John, of Saskatoon; Henry, of Erin; Robert in Indiana; Norman on the homestead; Mrs. Jos. Turner, Orton; Mrs. David Turner, Chesley; Mrs. J. H. Burt, Hillsburg; Mrs. Wm. Siep, Mrs. Wm. Dix, and Mrs. Alf. Boles, Fergus. Deceased was a successful and prosperous farmer and was held in high esteem as an obliging neighbor, and an industrious, honest and God-fearing man. He was a member of the Methodist Church, a Conservative in politics and was at one time a member of East Garafraxa Council. There was a large attendance at the funeral, which was held to Price's Corners cemetery on Friday afternoon. Rev. C. G. Cole, of Orton, and Rev. R. S. Scott, of Hillsburg, conducted the services at the house and grave. Six of the sons acted as pallbearers. The members of the family were all home for the funeral except one son, John, of Saskatoon, who visited his father only a short time before his death.

The Salvation Army

The West Toronto Salvation Army Band of 25 pieces visited Orangeville Saturday and Sunday and provided our townspeople with some inspiring sacred music. The band is one of the best army bands in the province and its playing was a delightful treat. The visiting musicians gave a concert in the Opera House on Saturday night and also assisted in all the Sunday services. A sacred concert was also given in the Opera House on Sunday afternoon and a musical service in the same place at night. The services were all well-attended.

A Babylonian Tablet

Mr. Fletcher Stewart is the possessor of a brownish colored cube about one and a half inches in thickness, which he prizes very highly. The surface is covered with wedge shaped indentations which call to mind the Babylonian characters which most people have seen in illustrated Family Bibles. This is actually what the marks represent for the cube is one of the ancient Babylonian tablets or temple records that have been dug up on the sites of the ancient towns of Drehem and Jokha in Mesopotamia. The tablets relate to the reigns of five Babylonian kings who were contemporary with Abraham. This particular tablet dates from the reign of Bur-Sin I, 2324-2315 B. C. It is one of several thousands found in the ancient ruins, many of which contain records of payments in kind. The tablet is made of clay, containing a great deal of marl or chalk and being free from grit. The writing is in cuneiform characters, each mark being made with the edge of a square stick or stylus. The clay was sun-baked or kiln-dried after it was marked. The authenticity of the tablet, which is in Mr. Stewart's possession, is vouched for by Dr. Albert T. Clay, professor of Assyriology in Yale University.

County of Peel Farmers' Institute Excursion to Guelph will be on Tuesday, 23rd June.

Injured in Runaway

Wesley Lockhart, an Albion farmer, had both thighs fractured and sustained other serious injuries near Wildfield on Sunday. He was driving toward Bolton when he saw an auto approaching. He turned into a sideroad, but as the auto passed his horse reared and overturned the buggy. The unfortunate man was taken to Bolton and afterwards to the Western Hospital, Toronto.

Display of Pictures

An excellent display of photographic reproductions of world-famous paintings was made in the Public Library Monday, Tuesday and yesterday. Altogether about 130 photographs were shown. The pictures included copies of the best known works of nearly all the great artists, such as Rembrandt, Raphael, Van Dyke, Michael Angelo, Alma Tadema, Hals, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Velasquez, Whistler, Lawrence, Sir John Mallais and Holbein. The display was made by the Berlin Photographic Co., of New York, and was brought to Orangeville through the instrumentality of School Inspector W. R. Liddy. Its educational value is unquestioned and Mr. Liddy has placed Orangeville lovers of art under a debt of gratitude. The exhibit was viewed by large numbers of of our citizens, teachers and High School students, who took advantage of the splendid opportunity to familiarize themselves with the works of the great masters. The exhibit was forwarded from here to Cobalt.

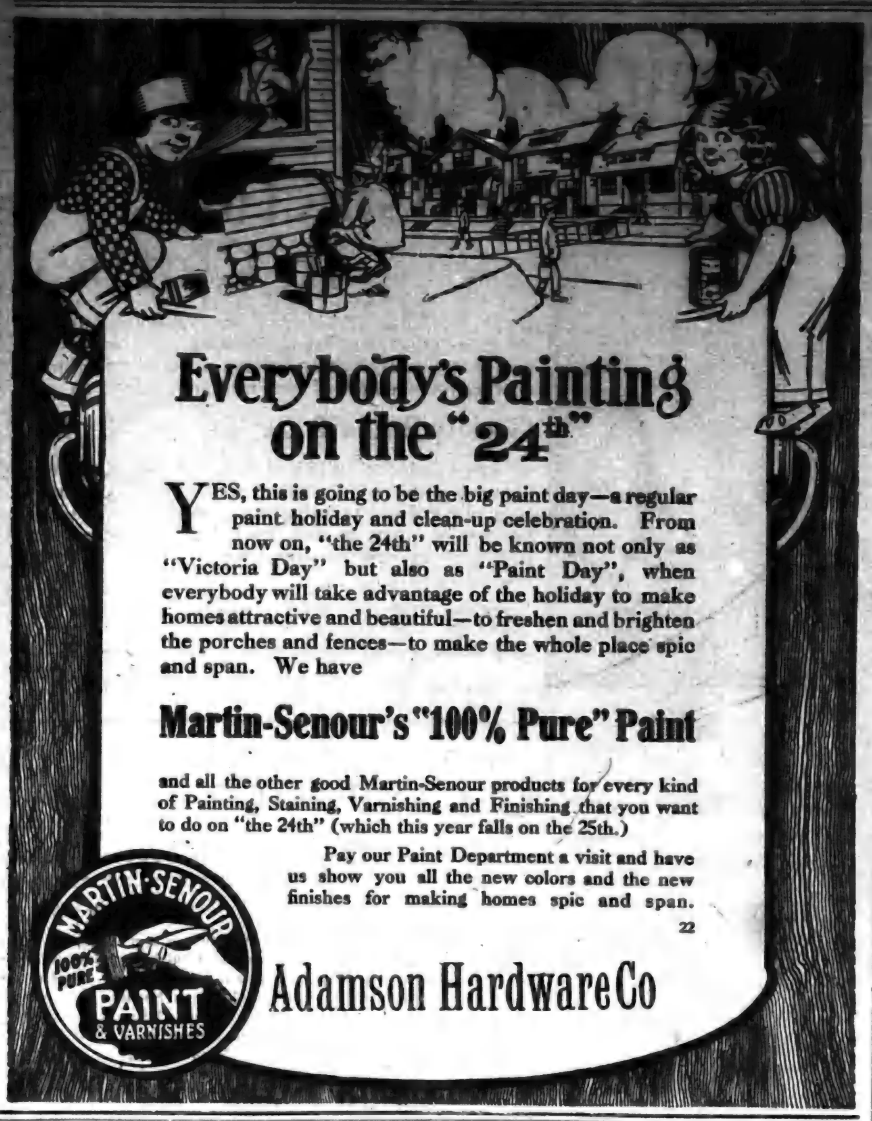
Has no greater Cooking Convenience than you can have on the Farm or in the Village

Cooking in a hot, stuffy kitchen on a sizzling hot wood or coal range in summer has probably made more women discontented with farm or village life than any one thing. She thinks of the gas stoves the city folk can cook on. We have a joyful message for these women.



The "Detroit" Vapor Gasolene Stoves

Work just like a city gas stove, so you do not have to be without the convenience of a city gas stove any longer, no matter where you live. No storage or pressure tanks needed. You can put the stove in any part of the kitchen. Simply light the burners and the stove is ready to cook on. We invite you to look at them, and we will give you a little book showing the different styles and sizes.

THE OUTRAGE AT ST. SCHOLASTIQUE.

The sympathy of the entire Orange Association will go out to the Protestants who are trying to recover possession of the body of the French Protestant at St. Scholastique which was forcibly taken away and buried in unconsecrated ground in a Roman Catholic cemetery. What Roman Catholics can hope to gain by perpetrating such an outrage it is hard to imagine. Perhaps they merely desired to demonstrate the absolute power the church has in Quebec, even when it pursues a course that is repugnant to every noble instinct of the human race.

In this case the Roman Catholic brother of the deceased man, who had been a Protestant for over 20 years, was quite prepared to respect his brother's religious convictions and bury him in a Protestant cemetery, but the priests seem to have been animated by a desire to stigmatize his memory, and to make the simple people thereabout feel what a dreadful sin it is to leave the mother church, and so they had the other relatives swarm into the house and prevent the holding of a Protestant burial service, and take the body and bury it with the outcasts and the unbaptized.

Advocates of Home Rule point to Quebec as an example of the fair play that is accorded by a Roman Catholic majority. Such persons are either supporters of the Papacy or they do not know much about conditions existing in every place in this country where the Roman Catholics are found in large numbers. The people of Quebec are far more tolerant than the Roman Catholics of Ireland. But how would you like to be governed by those who incited, permitted and condoned the affair at St. Scholastique?

In view of the principles and practices of the Papacy, it is nothing short of criminal for Protestants to go out of their way to put people of their own faith at the mercy of a Roman Catholic majority.—Orange Sentinel.

HE DIDN'T GET IT.

Years ago it used to be the custom of the country folk to work out their taxes by boarding the teacher, which meant that from time to time he was supplied from various quarters with food.

One day a boy named Elisha Anderson sought the teacher and said: "Say, teacher, my pa wants to know if you like pork?"

"Indeed, I do," was the reply.

"Say to your father that there is nothing in the way of meat I like better than pork."

Some time elapsed and there was no pork from Elisha's father, a fact that in no way surprised the teacher, for the old man was known throughout the country as a tight proposition. Nevertheless, one afternoon the teacher asked the boy: "How about that pork, Elisha, that your father promised me?"

"Oh," answered the boy, "the pig got well."—Harper's Monthly.

TWO WOMEN SAVED FROM OPERATIONS

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Their Own Stories Here Told.

Edmonton, Alberta, Can.—"I think it is no more than right for me to thank you for what your kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have done for me.

"When I wrote to you some time ago I was a very sick woman suffering from female troubles. I had organic inflammation and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now, after using three bottles of it, I feel like a new woman. I most heartily recommend your medicine to all women who suffer with female troubles. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills, and think they are fine. I will never be without the medicine in the house."—Mrs. Frank Emsley, 903 Columbia Avenue, Edmonton, Alberta.

The Other Case.

Beatrice, Neb.—"Just after my marriage my left side began to pain me and the pain got so severe at times that I suffered terribly with it. I visited three doctors and each one wanted to operate on me but I would not consent to an operation. I heard of the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was doing for others and I used several bottles of it with the result that I haven't been bothered with my side since then. I am in good health and I have two little girls."—Mrs. R. B. Child, Beatrice, Neb.

MUST GET DOWN TO PRODUCING WEALTH.

It is gratifying to learn from a correspondent in this issue that the people of British Columbia have found out that wealth getting upon a purely speculative basis is a very transitory thing. The people of that province now realize that they must get back to creating wealth from the land. This will mean much for the future of agriculture in that part of Canada. Like most other countries, British Columbia has had its boom period, a period when everything from real estate down has had an inflated value, a value that will not stand up against practical and sane methods when applied to the land or city development. The coast cities were bound to expand quickly, but now that that period of expansion is over it is to be hoped that the people of the Pacific Province will realize that their permanent source of wealth and prosperity lies in the splendid farming areas, and fertile soils in which the country abounds. Another "bubble," as our correspondent states, has burst. British Columbia fruit lands have been advertised far and wide. To such an extent has this been the case that the average price of fruit lands has reached a point where it is difficult to see how the business of fruit growing can be carried on profitably under this handicap. We do not doubt for a moment that the original fruit lands of the Okanagan are worth the money, and are among the most profitable fruit-producing areas on the continent. But it is some years since the best of these lands were taken up. Of late years there has been a tendency to exploit other lands not so suitable for fruit growing purposes. On these our correspondent states it is impossible for a man to make a living by growing fruit on ten acres. Forty to fifty acres are needed, and consequently land values must come down. A person might pay $300 an acre for choice fruit land and come out all right if he only required to purchase 10 acres. But if 40 acres are needed the price per acre must come down.—Canadian Farm.

The First Matinee.

The Orangeville Driving Club will hold the first matinee of the season on the Exhibition Grounds on Monday afternoon, May 25th. There are a number of speedy horses in town this year and several outsiders have intimated that they intend to enter their roadsters, so that a good afternoon's sport may be looked for.

A TEST OF MANHOOD.

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you;
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
But make allowance for their doubting, too;
If you can wait and not be tired by waiting,
Or being lied about, don't deal in lies,
Or being hated, don't give way to hating;
And yet don't look too good, nor talk too wise.

If you can dream—and not make dreams your master;
If you can think—and not make thought your aim,
If you can meet with triumph and disaster
And treat these two imposters just the same;
If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
Or watch the things you gave your life to, broken,
And stoop and build 'em up with wornout tools.

If you can make one heap of all your winnings
And risk it on one turn of pitch-and-toss,
And lose, and start again at your beginnings,
And never breathe a word about your loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve your turn long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you,
Except the will which says to them: Hold on.

If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with kings—nor lose the common touch,
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you,
If all men count with you, but none too much;
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the earth and everything that's in it,
And—which is money—you'll be a Man, my son!

—Rudyard Kipling.

TIME WILL TELL.

Mr. J. H. Fisher, M.P., is a friend of all the world and a good story-teller to boot. While Sir William Mackenzie was in Ottawa recently discussing Canadian Northern matters with the Dominion Government, Mr. Fisher undertook to encourage him with a story.

"Do you know, Sir William, your present relations with the government remind me of a story which is told of a namesake of my own down South? Rastus Fisher was in the white-washing business, and had recently married a woman who had been a servant at the Squire's house. Shortly after this auspicious event, the Squire met them, and they held a little conversation which ran something like this:

"Well, Rastus," said the Squire, "how are you?"

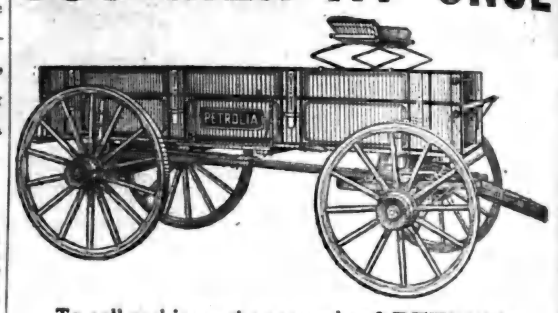
"Fine, Squire, fine!"

"Lots of white-washing to be done Rastus?"

"Yes, Squire, I'se gettin' all the work I can do. Yes, Squire, lots of work."

"And how is Miranda, Rastus?"

"Well, now say, Squire, that woman done worry me. Do you know, Squire, she's always asking me for money? Every time I go home she asks me for money. Sometimes it's fifty cents, and sometimes a quarter, and sometimes ten cents. But she's always asking for money."



"That's strange, Rastus,—Always asking you for money, eh! Well, what does she do with all the money you give her?"

"Well, I don't know, Squire. You see, I hadn't given her none yet."

Sir William is said to have enjoyed the story immensely.—Canadian Courier.

A rather simple looking lad halted before a blacksmith shop on his way home from school and eyed the doings of the proprietor with much interest. The brawny smith, dissatisfied with the boy's curiosity, held a piece of red-hot iron suddenly under the youngster's nose, hoping to make him beat a hasty retreat. "If you'll give me half a dollar I'll lick it," said the lad. The smith took from his pocket a half-dollar and held it out. The simple-looking youngster took the coin, licked it, dropped it in his pocket and walked away whistling.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Quickly Cured His Kidney Disease.

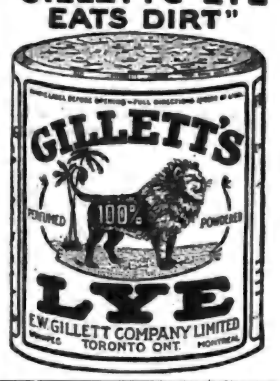
Marchbank, King's County, N.B., May 25th (Special).—After suffering for five years from kidney disease, brought on by strain, Hudson Marchbank, Esq., the well known farmer of this place, is again a strong, healthy man, and another grand cure for Dodd's Kidney Pills has been put on record. In an interview, Mr. Marchbank says:

"About five years ago I hurt my back from lifting, and it developed into kidney disease. My back pained me all the time, and I was very much troubled with headaches. My appetite was fitful: I had a bitter taste in my mouth in the mornings; I perspired freely and my perspiration had a disagreeable odor.

"I used liniments and plasters, but they did not do me any good, and as there were other symptoms that my kidneys were affected, I decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. After using two boxes, my back was completely cured, and my kidneys have not troubled me since."



When Mr. Marchbank decided that his kidneys were the cause of his troubles, the rest was easy. Almost any of his neighbors could tell him that Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure diseased kidneys.

THE BANNER

THE BANNER, MAY 28th, 1914.

THE SUN AND "US."

When The Banner took The Sun to task a couple of weeks ago for its persistent attempts to belittle John Best it did so without any thought or intention of putting a raw deal over our downtown cotem. This, however, appears to be the light in which our remarks, which were made in a good-natured and rather expostulatory spirit, were interpreted. It was, perhaps, only the natural thing to expect some rejoinder, but we may as well confess that we were not looking for the nasty things that our cotem attempted to work off in last week's issue. We could afford to allow ill-natured remarks about this journal, its record and its policy to pass unnoticed, were it not for the interpretation that might be placed upon our silence. The Sun goes altogether out of its way to read sinister motives into The Banner's article and then hastens to give its readers a badly garbled version of this journal's stand on political questions in past years. On this point all that it is necessary to say is that The Banner is quite content to leave its record to the judgment of its readers, but does not propose to allow itself to be tried, condemned and executed by envious and disgruntled business rivals. According to the Sun's fairy tale, The Banner was established for the purpose of defeating the Conservatives. This is of course altogether wide of the mark. This journal was founded as a purely business enterprise and results have amply justified the faith and judgment of its founder. That it found itself in opposition to official Conservatism at an early stage in its career, was due to the fact that the Tupper Government was engaged, with the whole-souled assistance of the Orangeville Sun, Bishop Cameron of Antigonish and nearly every other high dignitary in the Roman Catholic Church, in a desperate attempt to force the Separate School system upon the people of Manitoba. Thousands of staunch Conservatives were forced to take the same position. Everybody knows how disastrously the attempt failed. The wonder is that our cotem should be so tactless as to invite a stirring up of memories of its discomfiture and humiliation during that stirring period in Canada's history. We freely admit that there have been times when The Banner felt it was its duty to oppose official Conservatism both in high and low places, but it has never been guilty of sending blue-pencilled articles denouncing the Borden navy scheme or ridiculing Conservative M. P's. to the Toronto Globe for the purpose of furnishing the Liberal organ with campaign ammunition. Can our cotem say as much?

What we strongly suspect is really worrying The Sun is the fear that The Banner should consider it in the interests of the electors of this constituency to advise them to support a Conservative candidate. This would be an altogether unpalatable evidence of this journal's independence. The mere thought of such an eventuality is enough to give our cotem cold feet and to set its tongue wagging deliriously about government pap, mail contract advts., stray Ottawa job printing and similar delicacies that it is no longer permitted to enjoy but may still sniff at from afar.

Meantime the local situation must appeal to the risibilities of John Best, if the member for Dufferin really possesses the lively sense of humor that The Banner imagines he does. Ever since Mr. Best was elected the local Tory organs have been carping, criticizing or at best giving him half-hearted support and all because he had the backbone to refuse to pay an election bill for which he had not received value. Now The Post, fearful that The Banner has designs on its "thunder," has made the sudden discovery that Mr. Best "has accomplished many things" for the "country at large" and has "contributed in no small measure to the success of the Borden administration." So excited is our cotem over its recently found knowledge of Mr. Best's greatness that it would not be surprising if it should slate him for the first vacant Cabinet position or even suggest that he would make a worthy successor to Mr. Borden. The Post, one of the self-styled Tory organs, would have it that Mr. Best is one of the mainstays of the Ottawa Government. In the estimation of The Sun, the other local Tory organ, the member for Dufferin is a mere "puddin'-head" who didn't know enough to walk out of the House at the right time. If our genial and capable representative were consulted as to his position and prominence, he would probably say that the truth lies about midway between these extremes. In any event he must be having a lot of fun and satisfaction watching the antics of The Post and Sun.

PARALYZED LIMBS.

To-day it is sleeplessness, headaches, digestive trouble, and irritability. Next thing you know some form of paralysis has developed. Mr. Alex. Honsburger, 10 Moore street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using ten boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed work, and now feel better than I did for 20 years."

NEW CROWN ATTORNEY

Mr. J. L. Island Received His Commission on Friday.

Was Sworn in by Judge Fisher on Tuesday.

Mr. J. L. Island, Mayor of Orangeville, who was given the appointment of Crown Attorney for the County of Dufferin by an Order-in-Council dated May 9th, received his commission from Attorney-General J. J. Foy last Friday. On Tuesday the new Crown Attorney was sworn in by His Honor, Judge Fisher, who administered the oath of allegiance and also the special oath provided for the County Crown Attorney's Act.

John Leighton Island, B.A., the new County Crown Attorney, was born in Mono township on October 21st, 1866. His father, Mr. Joseph Island, who resided on the Centre Road until he retired from farming a few years ago, was a son of the late Michael Island, one of the very earliest settlers in the township. Mayor

Island received his elementary education in the "Mono College" school and later on passed through the Public and High Schools of this town. After obtaining a teacher's certificate from the latter institution he took the Model School course and subsequently taught school at Hockley for three years. Having decided to make law his life profession, he took the Political Science honor course at Toronto University, graduating with distinction in 1893. He studied law for a year with Mr. A. A. Hughson, Town Clerk and Corporation Solicitor, and completed his course with Mr. F. J. Roche, now Clerk of the Non-Jury Assizes at Toronto. Mr. Island was called to the bar in 1896 and immediately afterwards commenced to practise in Orangeville, where his superior education and his capacity for hard, painstaking work speedily brought him a large and profitable clientele. Mr. Island has always taken a keen interest in politics, whether municipal or general. He was first elected to the Orangeville Council in 1902 and to the County Council the following year as one of the representatives from District No. 1, which consisted of Orangeville and the greater part of Mono township. Under the system which prevailed at that time County Councillors were elected by popular vote for a two year term. In 1904 the present Mayor was elected to the responsible office of Warden of Dufferin, which position he filled with dignity and credit. In 1896 Mr. Island acted as financial agent for Mr. W. L. Walsh, now Judge of the Supreme Court of Alberta and at that time the unsuccessful Conservative candidate for the old constituency of Cardwell. In 1900 he filled the same position for the late Robert Johnston, who was elected for Cardwell. In 1907 Mr. Island, contested the Orangeville mayoralty against C. R. McKeown, now M.P.P. for Dufferin, and was beaten by the narrow margin of 3 votes after one of the most exciting elections in the history of the town. He was subsequently nominated at the Conservative Convention which met in Shelburne and selected Mr. McKeown as the successor to the late Dr. Lewis, but decided for business reasons not to press his candidature at that time. Mr. Island re-entered municipal politics in 1913, when he defeated Dr. Campbell for the mayoralty after an exciting contest. Last January he received the compliment of a second term by acclamation. In municipal affairs Mayor Island has amply proved his worth. His legal training and his intimate knowledge of municipal procedure combine to make him an ideal presiding officer. While not obtrusive in his opinions, he has decided views on public matters and is generally found exerting his influence in behalf of safe and sane measures. He has the larger viewpoint, has given evidence of strong faith in the future of Orangeville and has made it plain that he believes that the prosperity of the town is dependent upon better railway facilities and the development of local manufacturing industries. He is an active member of the Board of Trade and is an enthusiastic member of the local branch of the Hydro-Radial Railway Union. Mayor Island has been solicitor for Mono since 1900. The new Crown Attorney is a member and an official of St. Mark's Church. He is also a prominent secret society man, having been long identified with the Orange and Masonic Orders. He is a member and Past Master of Aaron L.O.L. No. 427 and also a Past Master of Dufferin County Orange Lodge. He is a member of Harris Lodge, A.F. & A. M. Mayor Island is married to a daughter of the late E. J. McKitrick, formerly a prominent Orangeville business man. Their family consists of two little girls. The new Crown Attorney will also fill the position of Clerk of the Peace. His appointment is in every way acceptable and the people of town and county are fortunate in securing the services of so capable and painstaking an official.

SUCCESSFUL MATINEE.

Rena Bison and Pearl Thorne were the Winners.

A large crowd turned out to the racing matinee which the Orangeville Driving Club held on Exhibition Park on Monday afternoon. Keen interest was evinced in the different events, although there was considerable disappointment over the failure of the two Port Arthur horses, which have been training on the track all spring, to face the starter. One of the horses was entered in Class A, and the other in Class B, but Monday forenoon the owner decided to withdraw the entries. This caused a last moment rearrangement of the programme, Class A being cancelled and the local horses entered in that event being transferred to Classes B and C. The track, which is conceded to be one of the finest half-mile racecourses in the province, was in perfect condition. The warm, sunny afternoon was ideal for racing and as a consequence the horses were seen at their best. D. A. Hogg's Rena Bison was in a class by herself in the Class B event and her driver, Dr. Riddell, was not called upon to urge her at any stage of the race. Very Direct and Joe Miller had a hot contest for second place, but the McQuarrie horse proved the better finisher. Pearl Thorn captured Class C, with Florence Peters a strong contender for the premier position, George Reid's Monte finished second in two heats, but his driver had to be content with third place. The Class B race was trotted in 2.29. The summary follows:—

CLASS B.

Rena Bison, D. A. Hogg, Orangeville	2	2	1	1	1
Very Direct, N. Mc Quarrie, Orangeville	3	1	2	2	2
Joe Miller, J. Cannawin, Orangeville	1	3	3	3	3

CLASS C.

Pearl Thorn, J. Finnerty, Orangeville	1	2	1	2
Florence Peters, J. Finnerty, Orangeville	3	1	3	1
Monte, G. H. Reid, Mono	2	3	2	3

Mr. Ollie Wilder gave good satisfaction as starter and Mr. J. Z. Henry, another local man, proved a competent judge. There was much favorable comment upon the condition and appearance of the track and grounds. The former was in first-class condition. The new grand stand and a new ring which the Agricultural Society has just constructed for judging harness horses at the fall fair have made a very marked improvement in the general appearance of the grounds.

INGLEWOOD.

Inglewood has a population of about three hundred souls.

Inglewood has a football field provided by the Women's Institute, and a rink.

Inglewood has no resident medical doctor nor dentist, but has one veterinary surgeon.

Inglewood has besides three general stores and a barber shop, nine other public business places.

There is only one religious denomination represented in Inglewood, that being the Methodist communion. The pastor is Rev. S. E. Dunnick.

Inglewood has about fifteen hundred yards of cement sidewalks and the prospect is that more will be laid this summer.

Inglewood was made a police village in 1907. The police commissioners for 1914 are Messrs. George Eadd, Ed. Trout, and J. N. McEachren.

Inglewood is on the Credit river and at the junction of the Georgetown to Allandale branch of the Grand Trunk and the Teeswater branch of the C.P.R.

Inglewood is two miles from the Caledon Club. This club has large fishing reservations and its members include Sir John Gibson, George H. Gooderham, M.L.A., Edward Seagram, and many other prominent men.

Inglewood's chief industries are Shale Products, Limited, and D. Graham & Sons. The former manufacture bricks and employ about 80 hands, while the latter manufacture woollen goods and give employment to about 50 people.

CALEDON.

Convenor John Warnock, accompanied by Messrs. John Stubbs, David Patterson, W. J. Limebeer, James Clarke, W. J. Warnock and Elgin Stubbs, attended the Conservative Convention in Brampton on Saturday last, reports a very enthusiastic meeting. Mr. J. R. Fallis, M. P. P., was again the unanimous choice, no other man being mentioned, which was certainly a glowing tribute to this clever young member of the Legislature, whose success at the coming election is a foregone conclusion.

Mr. J. J. McHugh disposed of his fancy driving horse to Mr. Irwin, of Laurel, last week. John is now considering whether he will replace the horse with another equine or buy an automobile, but we all know his leanings toward the equine family and predict another horse.

Sunday was the greatest motor day in the history of this place. From early morn till late at night automobiles large and small and motorcycles with and without their basket attachment passed through here. They are using, and enjoying the use of the road which the farmers have built and paid for. We strongly commend the recomendation of the Highway Commission in having these vehicles taxed and hope the Government will act on the suggestion. Some of the farmers have come to the conclusion that the only way for them to get anything for their money is to get in the game.

Mr. Watson McGillivray, of West Toronto, motored up on the 24th and spent the day renewing the scenes of his boyhood days. "Watt" is another of our boys who has made good in the Queen City.

Mr. W. T. Harris, who has been suffering with neuralgia in his face for the last week, is now, we are pleased to state, convalescing.

On Friday last Mr. Geo. Laughlin, one of our prosperous and progressive farmers, purchased an automobile from Mr. J. E. Smith, Orangeville's genial and able representative of the Ford Motor Co.. Mr. Laughlin is the first farmer in this vicinity to buy an auto and we congratulate him on his enterprise and hope that it may bring him the comfort and pleasure which he deserves.

Miss Mabel Hillyard, who has been engaged in missionary work in Montreal for the past year and a half, is visiting at her parental home here.

Mr. W. J. Dodds, of West Toronto, spent the 24th with Caledon friends and enjoyed an afternoon's fishing in the Credit. W. J. has always been a great lover of this sport and a good hand to locate the speckled beauties and enjoy the stories incidental to the game.

The great heat of the past few days is giving great growth to plant life and although uncomfortable for work is greatly appreciated by the farmers.

Mrs. (Rev.) J. Burkholder, Mrs. E. E. Wilson, Miss Louise Laughlin and Mrs. T. C. Glassford were delegates from Knox Church to a splendid missionary convention in Shelburne on Tuesday of last week.

Mr. Thos. Clarke, of Toronto, visited the home of Mr. J. J. Nesbitt during the holiday.

Death of Allen Marshall.

Mr. Allen Marshall, a well-known East Garafraxa farmer, died quite suddenly at his home west of this town about noon on Thursday. His death, which was caused by Graves goitre, a malady of very rare occurrence in men, took place after a week's illness. Mr. Marshall, who was about 41 years of age, was the youngest son of the late Isaac Marshall, of East Garafraxa. He leaves a widow, who is a sister of ex-Mayor W. M. Green, and a family of three young children—a boy and two girls. His mother, now over 80 years of age, is still living and resided with the deceased. Ex-Mayor F. J. Marshall, of Orangeville, now living in Calgary, Mr. W. B. Marshall, Medicine Hat, Mrs. W. A. Wansbrough, Grand Valley, and Mrs. (Rev.) J. J. Ferguson, Tottenham, are the surviving brothers and sisters. Deep sympathy is felt for the young wife, the mother, children and other relatives in their unexpected bereavement. The funeral was deferred until Monday afternoon to allow Mr. F. J. Marshall time to reach here. Mr. Marshall reached Tottenham Monday morning and was met there by Mr. J. A. Arnott, who brought him across country to Orangeville in his auto. The funeral, which was a very large one, was held to Greenwood Cemetery. Among the floral offerings were beautiful wreaths from Court Gardiner No. 159, C.O.F., in which Mr. Marshall carried $1000 life insurance, the W.M.S. of Orangeville Methodist Church and the two brothers. Rev. G. W. Robinson conducted the services at the house and grave. The pallbearers were Rev. J. J. Ferguson and Messrs. F. J. Marshall, W. A. Wansbrough, J. D. McMillan, Jack Green and W. M. Green.

The Late John Chapman

It is with feelings of regret we chronicle the demise of one of Adjala's oldest and most highly respected residents, Mr. John Chapman, who passed to his reward on Monday evening at the advanced age of fourscore years. The late Mr. Chapman was a native of the Green Isle, having been born in County Armagh. He emigrated to Canada in 1847 and after living a couple of years near Lloydtown he moved to Adjala, where he spent the remainder of his days. The country was nearly all bush at the time he located in Adjala and he had a hand in the clearing of it. He subsequently settled on lot 7, in the 5th concession, which was his home until the end. Living in what might be called the pioneer days of the township, he was imbued with the spirit of the pioneer, one of whose outstanding characteristics is hospitality, which virtue he exhibited in a marked degree and which won him many firm friends. He was beloved by every one. Mrs. Chapman survives him, besides one daughter, Mrs. George White, of Ballyeroy, and two sons, Thomas and George, of Connor. One sister, Mrs. Pollock, of Proton Village, also survives him. A very large number of friends and acquaintances attended the funeral to Raney's Church on Wednesday.—Tottenham Sentinel.

Samuel Montgomery.

Samuel Montgomery, a lifelong resident of Orangeville and vicinity, passed away on Thursday last after an illness of about two years' duration. Always a strong, healthy man Mr. Montgomery first began to fail in health about two years ago, his ill-health beginning from an injury to his foot. In time his illness developed into pernicious anaemia, which defied the best efforts of his physicians. Although he had felt very miserable all this spring, he was able to go about until the last day or so. Deceased, who was 71 years and 8 months of age, was born on the 2nd line, west, Mono, his father, Samuel Montgomery, being one of the first settlers in that township. He followed farming in this neighborhood until 15 years ago, when he retired and came to live in Orangeville, taking up his residence on Mill St. He was an enthusiastic Orangeman, having first joined the Order on February 12th, 1859, a little over 55 years ago. At that time his lodge—L.O.L. No. 427, now comfortably housed in the brick hall on West Broadway—held its meetings in James Hamilton's house on the Blind Line. Mr. Montgomery was identified with St. Andrew's Church and was a Conservative in his political leanings. He was twice married and is survived by a widow and a family of three sons and three daughters. The latter are Joseph and Thomas Montgomery, of Fort William, Milford Montgomery, in Saskatchewan, Mrs. Jesse Hunt, Claude, Mrs. Thos. G. Marshall, Dundalk, and Mrs. Johnston, Toronto. Two brothers and a sister, David and Benjamin Montgomery and Mrs. John McKinney, all of Toronto, are the only surviving members of Mr. Montgomery's family. There was a large attendance of relatives, friends and old neighbors at the funeral, which was held to Greenwood Cemetery on Sunday afternoon. Rev. W. M. Morris and Rev. A. E. St. Dalmas conducted the services at the house and grave. Deceased was buried with Orange honors, upwards of 100 members of the Order accompanying the remains to their last resting place. The beautiful burial service of the Society was read over the grave by W. Bro. J. C. Reid, W. M. of L. O. L. No. 427, and Bro. Rev. W. M. Morris. The pallbearers were the two sons from Fort William, David Montgomery, James Huston and David H. Hunter, Toronto, and J. H. Nickle, Montreal. A number of floral tributes bore testimony to the sorrow and esteem of friends. The sympathy of the community is extended to the bereaved widow and other relatives.

HOW TO CURE STOMACH TROUBLE

The Common Cause is Lack of Blood—Therefore You Must Build Up the Blood.

There is the most intimate relation between the condition of the blood and the activity of the stomach. The blood depends upon the stomach for a large part of its nourishment, while every act of digestion, from the time the food enters the stomach and is assimilated by the blood needs plenty of pure well-oxidized blood. The muscles, glands and nerves of the stomach work only according to the quality of the blood.

The most common cause of indigestion is lack of rich, red blood. Not only does impure blood weaken the muscles of the stomach, but it lessens the product of the glands of the intestines and stomach, which furnish the digestive fluids. Nothing will more promptly cure indigestion than plenty of pure blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the safest and most certain blood-builder. A thorough trial of these pills gives a hearty appetite, perfect digestion, strength and health. Here is proof of the value of these Pills in cases of indigestion. Mrs. Alfred Austin, Varna, Ont., says: "My system became run-down and my stomach very weak. I had no desire for food and what I did take caused me great distress, and did not afford me nourishment, and I was gradually growing weaker, and could scarcely do any work at all. I did not sleep soundly at night and would wake up not at all refreshed and with a feeling of dread. Some years previously I had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with much benefit and this decided me to again try them. My confidence was not misplaced, as by the time I had used six boxes I was again feeling quite well."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by sending to The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

FALLIS RENOMINATED

Peel Conservatives Unanimous in Their Selection of Sitting Member.

There was a good representation of delegates from all parts of the County of Peel at the Liberal-Conservative Convention held in the Concert Hall in Brampton on Saturday. Every division in the County was represented. Dr. John Graham, of Mono Road, president of the association, occupied the chair. He called for nominations for a candidate to contest the riding in the Legislature, Mr. Reuben H. Lush, of Clarkson, nominated Mr. J. R. Fallis, the present member; W. J. Jamieson, of Inglewood, seconded the nomination. There was not a dissenting voice, and the nomination was made unanimous. Mr. Fallis was warmly greeted in rising to express thanks for the honor. He had only been the representative for six months, but had done his best to merit the confidence of the people of the county. He reviewed the work of the Government in the interests of the farmers and of the working man, and asked for the support of every Conservative to increase the splendid majority given him last Fall.

B. F. Justin, K.C., spoke briefly on the temperance policies of both parties and of the record made by the present Administration during its term of office.

Richard Blain, M.P., was the next speaker. He reviewed the situation in the county in recent years in regard to the temperance legislation introduced from time to time, upholding the policy of the present Administration as compared with that of the former regime.

Other speakers were Robt McCulloch, a former president of the association; L. H. Pallett, of Toronto Township, who warmly advocated the good roads policy enforced by the Government; W. S. Morphy, who paid the Prime Minister a splendid tribute; W. H. Rutledge, warden of the county; F. J. Jackson, treasurer of the Conservative Association; J. J. Donaghy, secretary, and D. H. McCaughrin, of Mono Road. The meeting closed with cheers for the candidate, the Premier and the ladies.

ARTHUR DUCKWITH KILLED.

Slipped and Fell From Running Board of a Street Car

Succumbed to Injuries Before Ambulance Reached Scene of Accident.

Arthur Duckwith, a conductor on the Toronto Street Railway, was almost instantly killed on Sunday morning by falling from the running board of an open street car. The accident occurred near the corner of Roxton Road and Arthur St., about 8.30 o'clock. The unfortunate man, who was in charge of a westbound Dundas car, was walking along the running board, collecting fares, when he was noticed to suddenly waver and fall from the car, which was travelling at a fair rate of speed. His head struck the pavement with terrific force and when the motorman and passengers reached him he was unconscious. There were few passengers on the car and even those who witnessed the fatality were unable to throw much light on the occurrence. It is supposed, however, that Duckwith slipped in some manner, causing him to lose his balance and pitch head foremost to the pavement. The police ambulance was summoned, but when it arrived the injured man was dead. The body was subsequently removed to the morgue, where an inquest was held.

Duckwith, who was 40 years and 6 months of age, was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Duckwith of this town. He lived here until about ten years ago, when he moved to Toronto entering the employ of the Toronto Street Railway shortly afterwards. His parents both died last autumn, his mother early in September and his father about the middle of October. George Duckwith, of Alton, is the only brother and Mrs. Geo. Nicholson, John St., the only surviving sister. The deceased leaves a widow, but no family.

The remains were brought to Orangeville for burial, the funeral taking place from the Forest Lawn cemetery at 2.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Rev. A. E. St. Dalmas conducted the service at the house and grave. There were many beautiful floral tributes. A large number of friends and former acquaintances were also present to pay a last mark of respect.

EFFECTIVE SUBSTITUTION.

Tourist: "You have an unusually large acreage of corn under cultivation; don't the crows annoy you a great deal?"

Farmer: "Oh, not to any extent."

Tourist: "That's peculiar, considering you have no scarecrows."

BEAUTIFUL HAIR-A CLEAN, COOL SCALP

Use Parisian Sage. It Makes the Hair Fluffy and Abundant

It is needless for you to have hair that is anything short of perfect. If it is falling out, losing color, splitting, or if the scalp burns and itches, immediately get from F. S. Pickering or any other counter a 50 cent bottle of Parisian Sage—use it frequently—the first application removes dandruff, invigorates the scalp, and beautifies the hair until it is gloriously radiant.

Parisian Sage supplies hair needs—is perfectly harmless. It contains the exact elements required to make the hair soft, wavy, glossy and to make it grow thick and beautiful.

You will surely like Parisian Sage. It is one of the best and most delightful hair tonics known.

Presented With Conductor's Baton.

The choir of Orangeville Baptist Church met at the home of the pastor, Rev. A. E. de St. Dalmas, on Friday evening, May 22nd, for the purpose of practice and took advantage of the occasion to present their leader, Mr. Percival Harding, with an address and a solid ebony ivory tipped conductor's baton, mounted with sterling silver and suitably engraved. The address, which was read by Mr. Reginald King, Secretary of the choir, was worded as follows:—

Orangeville, May 22nd, 1914.

Mr. Percival Harding

Dear Brother:

We, the Choir, have met to-night to extend our compliments upon your birthday, to ask you to accept this slight token of our esteem and appreciation of your faithful services and also to express the hope that we will have the pleasure of continuing under your leadership for some time to come.

"May your life be a lovely symphony
With never a tuneless note,
To the ears of all who know you
May its lingering sweetness float."

Signed on behalf of the Choir

Reginald King,
H. Nightingale.

After the presentation the hostess, Mrs. de St. Dalmas, served refreshments.

JAP-A-LAC is not a "varnish" in the ordinary sense of the word. It varnishes, stains, enamels—in one process; and it gives a "finish" to any household article that no mere varnish can give. Don't throw it away—"JAP-A-LAC" it!

Smooth Out the Ruts

HOW soon will your roads, that now take the heart and soul out of every man and horse that uses them, be made into a continuous stretch of road that you and everyone in your county will be proud of ?

How soon will you stop filling the ruts and mud holes with your road taxes, and build roads that will permit you to put your road taxes into more good roads ?

Concrete Roads

cost no more to build than any other good road, and their upkeep expense is practically nothing, which makes them the cheapest kind of good roads.

Concrete roads benefit the farmer, consumer, merchant, newspaper, board of trade and railroad. They make for greater prosperity generally, by increasing land values and production; bringing more trade; more industries; more employment; greater traffic. They decrease the cost of marketing. All of these factors combine to decrease the cost of living.

Every citizen owes it to himself to investigate the advantages of concrete roads and learn how they will directly benefit him. This information is free for the asking. Write for it to-day to

Terrible Scalding Accident

ZAM-BUK GAVE QUICK RELIEF.

For taking the pain out of a burn or scald there is nothing equal to Zam-Buk. Mrs. Eugene Demers, of Pembroke, Ont., who was the victim of a painful scalding accident, proved this. She says :—"I was carrying a boiler of steaming water from the stove to the wash-tub, when suddenly my strength failed. As the boiler was falling in spite of my efforts, I heard my babies cry, and to avoid scalding them I gave the vessel a quick turn. The effect of this was that every drop of the boiling water poured over my feet and limbs, scalding me from my waist down.

"As soon as I saw the children had escaped, I told my oldest boy to bring the Zam-Buk (which we always keep in the house). I applied Zam-Buk freely, and the pain was soon eased. I continued using Zam-Buk, and in a wonderfully short time the sores were completely healed."

Zam-Buk is equally good for cuts, bruises, eczema, ulcers, piles, pimples, etc. Price 50c. per box, at all druggist and stores, or post free from the Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, on receipt of price. Refuse substitutes and imitations. There is nothing just as good!"

THE FARMER'S CREED.

It would be no easy matter to amend this "farmer's creed"—which is found in the Breeders' Gazette :—

We believe in the good earth and its soil.

We believe that all men should love the soil and understand it.

We believe that soil culture and soul culture go hand in hand.

We believe he nobly serves who makes two blades grow where one grew before.

We believe that blood will tell.

We believe that good seed should go into the enriched soil.

We believe that good animals should crop the grass.

We believe in the divine right of man to labor.

We believe in helping men to get full reward for their toil.

We believe in better farms, with better roads passing them.

We believe in better rural schools and better teachers in them.

We believe that the housewife is the better half, and that to her home should come all manner of comforts.

SECTIONMAN'S IRON NERVE.

Crossed Wrecked Bridge and Flagged Train.

Averted Disaster by Warning Westbound Winnipeg Train.

The presence of mind and the nerve of an heroic sectionman are responsible in all probability for averting at least an accident and possibly a dire tragedy up at Baxter in the early hours of Friday morning last. The treacherous sandy bottom under the supports to the bridge which carries the C. P. R. across the Nottawasaga at Baxter gave way and a few seconds the bridge was thrown into such a shape that had a train ran on it almost certain disaster would have ensued. The watchman and some road employees were on the north side of the river when they heard the noise made by the sliding bottom, the creaking of timbers, the straining of steel braces and the snapping of bolts. The roadmen were asleep, but immediately went out to investigate, and discovered the bridge sagged and the supports moved altogether out of place. They were aware that the Winnipeg train would be coming along before very long, and if it were to be flagged some one must either cross the settling bridge or go down through the river and the underbrush along the shores to reach the south end of the bridge. There was reluctance and a short discussion. To cross the bridge was to take a man's life in his hands and to go down under the bridge was an undertaking which might not get a man across in time to flag the train. Sectionman Snell quickly made up his mind that he could accomplish the task and seizing the watchman's lantern he stepped on the wrecked structure and never hesitating a step walked briskly, but carefully, to the other side and was there in plenty of time to stop the through train, which between one and two o'clock came rumbling along bearing several coaches carrying a full complement of passengers, many of them asleep in their berths. The train backed into Alliston where the crew received orders to return to Toronto where the train was sent around by Bethany Junction. This route has been taken by all through trains since the accident and will continue to go that way for some time as a detour around the damaged bridge must be made and a temporary structure erected before ordinary traffic may be resumed. The cause of the accident was the weight of filling, which had been placed under the approaches, being too much for the quicksand which heaved, throwing the cement footings out from under the steel towers supporting the bridge. In a few seconds the span assumed the shape of a "shoot the chute" apparatus at a pleasure resort. All through traffic is now cut off and will not be resumed till some temporary means of crossing the ravine and the river in the bottom of it has been provided. The railway engineers are now busy determining what form this shall take.—Alliston Herald.

CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT SOCIETIES

The report from Ottawa that a bill has been introduced in Parliament permitting the establishment of co-operative credit societies synchronizes, as the Finance Minister would say, with reports from the West that many mortgages on farms are being foreclosed and farmers forced to leave the country, or at least leave the farm. Had these credit societies been in existence to-day some of these farmers might have been saved. Governments sometimes are hard to move, and it often requires conditions like those at present to bring about action in the direction of improvement. "Better late than never" may be all right, in its way. But "better never late" is very much more appropriate both for the individual and the Government. But, be that as it may, we are to have legislation permitting the establishment of co-operative credit societies. Whether they will benefit those whom they are intended to benefit will depend largely upon those who need help. It takes time to get societies of this nature under way and on a working basis that will be helpful to those concerned. There is no doubt, however, that such societies have accomplished much in other places, and there is no good reason why they should not do so here if they are energetically taken hold of. It would seem, however, that a little quicker method of securing cheap money would best meet the needs of the farmers in the West who are being forced out because of mortgage indebtedness and other causes. Quick relief is what is needed just now, and if some way were devised for supplying cheap money to tide over the present difficulty until the co-operative credit society became a factor in the situation the country would be greatly benefitted. It is unfortunate both for the country and for those forced out that so many farmers, as a recent press report states, have been compelled to give up farming in the West. It is doubtless true that the condition in which these farmers find themselves is largely of their own making, yet a little timely aid would have helped them as well as the country.—Canadian Farm.

DEATH OF J. A. WALLACE.

The following is copied from the Cartwright, Man., Review of May 7th.—"The people of Cartwright and district received a great shock when word was circulated that James Albert Wallace had suddenly passed away on Saturday morning, May 2nd, 1914, at 4.30 o'clock. Scarcely anyone could believe the sad news as Mr. Wallace had not been in failing health. Mr. Wallace died from heart failure with a sickness only lasting about two minutes making the shock all the harder to bear by his loved wife and family. He was born at Farmington, Ontario, July 6th, 1848. At the age of eighteen he joined the Orange Institution affiliating himself with Laurel L.O.L. No. 330. While in Cartwright he did not become a member of the Local Association, but was always faithful in attendance at the Annual Celebration on July 12th. He has lived in Cartwright for nearly fifteen years, he was well known and has made many friends. The funeral service was held in Knox Presbyterian church, Cartwright, on Monday, May 4th, at 3 o'clock. The service was conducted by Rev. W. T. Magwood, of the Methodist church. "Our Life as a Vapor," was the subject of the comforting message and there was an intense stillness and sympathy seldom felt in a funeral service. Mr. Wallace leaves in Cartwright, a widow, three sons, D.J., editor of Southern Man. Review; William and Charles, and one daughter, Eva, to mourn his loss. The other members of his family not able to attend were : J. A. Wallace, of Christina, Ont., Hrs. J. J. Bradley, of Port Kells, B.C., and Mrs. Robinson, of London, Ontario. The funeral was attended by a large number of friends and all join in expressing their heartfelt sympathy with this bereaved family in the hour of their deepest loss.

The new dining hall at the Ontario Agricultural College is being constructed of stone, and will be made ready for occupation next term. Dairy products are being raised to a higher standard through the efforts of the thirty-four instructors appointed by the Department.

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER XIII.—continued.

Drummond nodded.

"Very likely. The two sisters were very fond of one another, I believe. Perhaps Sir John is going to take the other one under his wing. Who's for a rubber of whist?"

Ennison made so many mistakes that he was glad to cut out early in the evening. He walked across the Park and called upon his sister.

"Is Lady Lascelles in?" he asked the butler.

"Her ladyship dined at home," the man answered. "I have just ordered a carriage for her. I believe that her ladyship is going to Carey House and on to the Marquis of Waterford's ball," he added, hastily consulting a diary on the hall table.

A tall elegantly dressed woman, followed by a maid, came down the broad staircase.

"Is that you, Nigel?" she asked. "I hope you are going to Carey House."

He shook his head, and threw open the door of a great dimly-lit apartment on the ground floor.

"Come in here a moment, will you, Blanche," he said. "I want to speak to you."

She assented, smiling. He was her only brother, and she his favorite sister. He closed the door.

"I want to ask you a question," he said. "A serious question."

She stopped buttoning her glove, and looked at him.

"Well?"

"You and all the rest of them are always lamenting that I do not marry. Supposing I made up my mind to marry some one of good enough family, but who was in a somewhat doubtful position, concerning whose antecedents, in fact, there was a certain amount of scandal. Would you stand by me—and her?"

"My dear Nigel!" she exclaimed. "Are you serious?"

"You know very well that I should never joke on such a subject. Mind, I am anticipating events. Nothing is settled upon. It may be, it probably will all come to nothing. But I want to know whether in such an event you would stand by me?"

She held out her hand.

"You can count upon me, Nigel," she said. "But for you Dad would never have let me marry Lascelles. He was only a younger son, and you know what trouble we had. I am with you through thick and thin, Nigel."

He kissed her, and handed her into the carriage. Then he went back to his rooms and lit a cigar.

"There are two things to be done," he said softly to himself. "The first is to discover what she is here for, and where she is staying. The second is to somehow meet Lady Ferringhall. These fellows must be right," he added thoughtfully, "and yet—there's a mystery somewhere."

CHAPTER XIV.

The Poster of "Alcide"

On Saturday mornings there was deposited on the plate of each guest at breakfast time, a long folded paper with Mrs. White's compliments. Anna thrust hers into her pocket unopened, and for the first time left the house without a smile upon her face. She was practically destitute of jewellery. The few pence left in her purse would only provide a very scanty lunch. Another day of non-success would mean many disagreeable things.

And even she was forced to admit to herself that this last resource of hers was a slender reed on which to lean. She mounted the stairs of the threatrical agent's office with very much less than her usual buoyancy, nor did she find much encouragement in the general appearance of the room into which she was shown. There were already a score or more of people there, some standing up and talking together, others seated in chairs ranged along the wall. Beyond was another door, on which was painted in black letters:

Mr. Earles,
Strictly Private.

Every one stared at Anna. Anna stared back at every one with undaunted composure. A Hebraic-looking young man with shiny frock coat and very high collar, advanced towards her languidly.

"Want to see Mr. Earles?" he inquired.

"I do," Anna answered. "Here is my card. Will you take it in to him?"

The young man smiled in a superior manner.

"Have to take your turn," he remarked laconically. "There's twenty before you, and Mr. Earles is going out at twelve sharp—important engagement. Better come another morning."

"Thank you," Anna answered. "I will take my chance."

She removed some posters from a chair, and seated herself coolly. The young man looked at her.

"Not doing anything in stock companies just now," he remarked.

"Indeed," Anna answered. "Very sensible of him, I'm sure."

There was a little titter. The young man turned on his heel.

"Unless you have an appointment—which you haven't," he said, "you will only waste your time here."

"I can spare it," Anna answered sauvely.

The young man gave it up, and entered into a lively little war of words with a yellow haired young person near the door. Anna picked up an ancient copy of the Era, and began to turn over the pages in a leisurely way. The conversation which her entrance had interrupted began to buzz all around her. A quarter of an hour passed. Then the inner door opened abruptly. A tall, clean-shaven man came out and walked rapidly through the room, exchanging greetings right and left, but evidently anxious to avoid being detained. Mr. Earles himself stood upon the threshold of his sanctum, the prototype of the smart natty Jew, with black hair, waxed moustache, and a wired flower in his button-hole. A florid-looking young woman rose up and accosted him eagerly.

"I'm next, Mr. Earles," she exclaimed. "Been sitting on the door-step almost two hours."

"In a minute, in a minute," he answered, his eyes fixed upon Anna. "Reuben, come here."

The Young man obeyed the summons. His employer retreated into the further apartment, leaving the door ajar.

"What's that young lady's name—girl in dark brown, stranger here?" Mr. Earles asked sharply.

The youth produced a crumpled-up card from his waistcoat pocket. A sense of impending disaster was upon him. Mr. Earles glanced at it, and his eyes flashed with anger.

"You blithering idiot!" he exclaimed.

Mr. Earles strode into the waiting room. His face was wreathed in smiles, his be-ringed hand was cordially outstretched.

"My dear Miss Pellissier," he said impressively, "this is an unexpected pleasure. Come in! Come in, do. I must apologize for my young puppy of a clerk. If I had known that you were here you should not have been kept waiting for a second."

It took a good deal to surprise Anna, but it was all she could do to follow Mr. Earles with composure into the inner room. There was a little murmur of consternation from the waiting crowd, and the florid young woman showed signs of temper, to which Mr. Earles was absolutely indifferent. He installed Anna in a comfortable easy chair, and placed his own chair between her and the door.

"Come," he said, "this is capital, capital. It was only a few months ago that I told you you must come to London, and you only laughed at me. Yet here you are, and at precisely the right moment, too. "By-the bye," he added, in a suddenly altered tone, "I hope, I trust—that you have not entered into any arrangements with any one here?"

"I—oh no!" Anna said, a little faintly. "I have no arrangements as yet—none at all."

Mr. Earles recovered his spirits.

"Excellent!" he exclaimed. "Your arrival is really most opportune. The halls are on the lookout for something new. 'By-the-bye, do you recognize that?"

Anna looked and gasped. An enormous poster almost covered one side of the wall—the poster. The figure of the girl upon it in plain black dress, standing with her hands behind her, was an undeniable and astonishing likeness of herself. It was her figure, her style of dress, her manner of arranging the hair. Mr. Earles regarded it approvingly.

"A wonderful piece of work," he declared. "A most wonderful likeness, too. I hope in a few days, Miss Pellissier, that these posters will be livening up our London hoardings."

Anna leaned back in the chair and laughed softly. Even this man had accepted her for "Alcide" without a moment's question. Then all the embarrassments of the matter flashed in upon her. She was suddenly grave.

"I suppose, Mr. Earles," she said, "that if I were to tell you that although that poster was designed from a rough study of me, and although my name is Pellissier, that nevertheless, I am not 'Alcide,' would you believe me?"

"You can try it on, if you like," Mr. Earles remarked genially. "My only answer would be to ask you to look at that mirror and then at the poster. The poster is of 'Alcide.' It is a duplicate of the French one."

Anna got up and looked at the mirror and then at the poster. The likeness was ridiculous.

"Well?" she said, sitting down "I want an engagement."

"Capital!" Mr. Earles declared. "Any choice as to which of the Halls? You can pick and choose, you know. I recommend the 'Unusual.'"

"I have no choice," Anna declared.

"I can get you," Mr. Earles said, slowly, keeping his eyes fixed upon her, "forty at the 'Unusual,' two turns, encores voluntary, six for matinees. We should not bar any engagements at private houses, but in other respects the arrangement must be exclusive."

"Forty what?" Anna asked bewildered.

"Guineas, of course," Mr. Earles answered, glibly. "Forty guineas a week. I mentioned sixty, I believe, when I was in Paris, but there are expenses, and just now business is bad."

Anna was speechless, but she had presence of mind enough to sit still until she had recovered herself. Mr. Earles watched her anxiously. She appeared to be considering.

"Of course," he ventured, "I could try for more at the Alhambra. Very likely they would give——"

"I should be satisfied with the sum you mention," Anna said quietly, "but there are difficulties."

"Don't use such a word, my dear young lady," Mr. Earles said persuasively. "Difficulties indeed. We'll make short work of them."

"I hope that you may," Anna answered enigmatically. "In the first place, I have no objection to the posters, as they have no name on them, but I do not wish to appear at all upon the stage as 'Alcide.' If you engage me it must be upon my own merits. You are taking it for granted that I am 'Alcide.' As a matter of fact, I am not."

"Excuse me," Mr. Earles said, "but this is rubbish."

"Call it what you like," Anna answered. "I can sing the 'Alcide' song, and in the same style. But I will not be engaged as 'Alcide' or advertised under that name."

Mr. Earles scratched his chin for a moment thoughtfully. Then a light seemed to break in upon him. He slapped his knee.

"By Jove!" he exclaimed. "Of course, I remember now. It was your sister who married Sir John Ferringhall the other day, wasn't it?"

Anna nodded.

"It was," she admitted.

"You needn't say a word more," Mr. Earles declared. "I see the difficulty. The old fool's been working on you through your sister to keep off the stage. He's a prig to the finger-tips, is Sir John—doesn't know what an artist is. It's awkward, but we'll get round it somehow. Now I'll tell you what I propose. Let me run you for six months. I'll give you, say, thirty-five guineas a week clear of expenses, and half of anything you earn above two turns a night. What do you say?"

"I agree," Anna said coldly, "if you will make it three months."

"Better say six," Mr. Earles protested, seating himself before the desk, and dipping his pen in the ink. "Four," Anna decided firmly. "I shall not agree to six."

"It scarcely gives me a chance," Mr. Earles said, with a resigned sigh, "but I shall rely upon you to stick to me so long as I do the right thing by you. You can't do without an agent, and there's no one can run you better than I can."

"You must also put in the agreement," Anna said, "that I do not represent myself to be 'Alcide,' and that I am not advertised to the public by that name."

Mr. Earles threw down his pen with a little exclamation.

"Come this way," he said.

He opened the door of still another room, in one corner of which was a grand piano. He seated himself before it.

"Go to the far corner," he said, "and sing the last verse of Les Petites."

He struck a note, and Anna responded. Playing with one hand he turned on his stool to glance at her. Instinctively she had fallen into the posture of the poster, her hands behind her, her head bent slightly forward, her chin uplifted, her eyes bright with the drollery of the song. Mr. Earles closed the piano with a bang.

"You are a funny, a very funny young lady," he said, "but we waste time here. You do not need my compliments. We will get on with the agreement and you shall have in it whatever rubbish you like."

Anna laughed, and went back to her easy chair. She knew that her voice was superior to Annabels, and she had no further qualms. Whilst she was wondering how to frame her request for an advance, Mr. Earles drew out his cheque book.

"You will not object," he said, glancing towards her, "to accepting a deposit. It is customary even where an agreement is drawn."

"I shall have no objection at all," Anna assured him.

He handed her a cheque for thirty-one pounds, ten shillings, and read the agreement through to her. Anna took up the pen, and signed, after a moment's hesitation,

A. Pellissier.

"I will send you a copy," Mr. Earles said, rubbing his hands together, "by post. Now, will you do me the honour of lunching with me, Miss Pellissier?"

Anna hesitated.

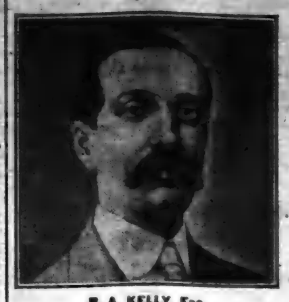
"Perhaps," he queried, "you wish to avoid being seen about with any one—er—connected with the profession, under the circumstances. If so, do not hesitate to tell me. Be frank, I beg you, Miss Pellissier. I am already too much flattered that you should have given me your confidence."

"You are very good, Mr. Earles," Anna said. "I think, perhaps if you will excuse me, that we will defer it."

"Just as you wish," Mr. Earles declared good-humouredly, "but I shall not let you go without drinking a glass of wine to our success."

He plunged into one of his drawers, and brought up a small gold-foiled bottle. The cork came out with a loud pop, and Anna could not help wondering how it must sound to the patient little crowd outside. She drank her glass of wine, however, and clanked glasses good-naturedly with Mr. Earles.

"You must leave me your address if you please," he said, as she rose to go.



She wrote it down. He looked at it with uplifted eyebrows, but made no remark.

"I shall probably want you to come down to the 'Unusual' to-morrow morning," he said. "Bring any new songs you may have.'}

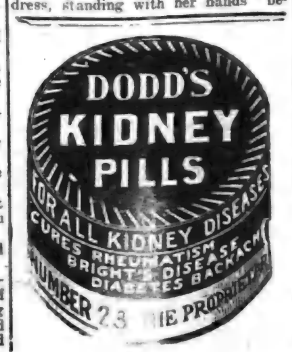
LIFE THREATENED BY KIDNEY DISEASE

His Health Is A Terrible State Until He Took "Fruit-a-tives"

B. A. KELLY, Esq.

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., Aug. 28th, 1913.



"About two years ago, I found my health in a very bad state. My kidneys were not doing their work, and I was all run down in condition. I felt the need of some good remedy, and having seen "Fruit-a-tives" advertised, I decided to try them. Their effect I found more than satisfactory. Their action was mild and the result all that could be expected.

"My kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes and I regained my old-time vitality. Today, I am as well as ever, the best health I have ever had".

B. A. KELLY

"Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest Kidney remedy in the world. It acts on the bowels and the skin as well as the Kidneys and thereby soothes and cures any Kidney soreness.

Foolish Saving

A penny saved is not always a penny earned. Sometimes it is two pennies lost. The merchant who spends nothing on advertising loses much more than he saves.

The money spent for plate glass windows is not looked on as lost; nor is the money spent on better interior lighting.

Anything that increases favor, that adds to sales, that multiplies customers is very properly regarded as a good investment.

Advertising is a good investment—just as plate glass windows are. Advertising sells more goods to more persons than shop-windows do.

A WORD TO THE PUBLIC.

Do you resent having a merchant address his message to you in the form of an advertisement in our columns? On the contrary, is not your impulse to respond to his friendly overtures?

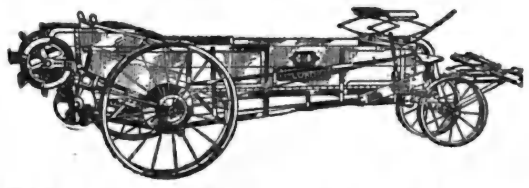
PROCURED LIQUOR



James Irwin Fined $20 and Costs Last Friday.

James Irwin, late proprietor of the Royal hotel near the C.P.R. station, was the defendant in a charge of illegal liquor selling, which was ventilated before Police Magistrate Pattullo in the Court House on Friday. Inspector Thos. Robinson laid the charge and Inspector Orr. of Peel, and Provincial Inspector J. A. Ayearst were interested spectators at the trial. Mr. J. M. Kearns, of Arthur, conducted the prosecution and Mr. A. A. Hughson, of Orangeville, acted for the defence. Angus Crawford and Sam Willoughby, both residents of Alton, were the chief witnesses. It appeared from the evidence that Crawford and Willoughby drove to Orangeville one evening in April in the hope of being able to purchase some whiskey. Meeting the defendant he agreed to make an effort to secure the greatly desired stimulant. Willoughby produced a $5 bill and instructed Irwin to buy a couple of bottles at $1.25 each. At this stage of the negotiations a tall stranger interjected himself into the conversation, declaring he could use plenty of the stuff. He was handed over the money, and shortly afterwards returned with two bottles, one of which was immediately opened in a lane, and the order repeated, a further supply being obtained with equal despatch by the stranger.

The defendant swore that he had not obtained the whiskey for the Alton pair and had never purchased or sold the liquor. His counsel strongly objected to the delay in laying the information, the alleged offence having taken place here on April 10th, and he argued that in any event the defendant was only an agent, citing the cases of Rex v. Mellroy and Rex v. Davis, decided by Justices Latchford and Kelly, in support of his contention. The Magistrate on considering the matter thought a case of selling had not been made out, but as it was illegal to purchase liquor in a municipality under local option, imposed a fine of $20 and costs, being of the opinion the defendant had procured some of the liquor.

This is the first case where the procurer of the liquor has been convicted and fined in Dufferin county since local option came into force four years ago. The effect of the decision is important, as it will make people who are asked to use their good offices to procure a supply of booze for a thirsty friend cautious about playing the part of the good Samaritan.

Women's Institute Notes.

The Corbetton Branch of the Women's Institute held its annual election of officers on May 12th. With its usual enterprise the Branch has undertaken to put down cement sidewalks in the village. This is greatly to be commended. It is a good thing to take pride in our surroundings.

Under the direction of an energetic staff of officers and with the assistance of the community, Honeywood Branch has been able to improve the cemetery greatly during the summer and this spring. We feel sure that this work will be of interest and profit to the community.

We are pleased to note that the work of the Women's Institute is in a flourishing condition throughout Dufferin. The Branches are all working along lines which go right to the foundation of citizenship.

Mrs. M. N. Norman, of Toronto, is the delegate from the Department to address the different Branches in Dufferin. She comes to us by special request and wherever she speaks she is found to be particularly attractive in her practical views, clear enunciation, choice English and happy style. Her subjects are all good and appeal to her audience. Mrs. Norman comes to Orangeville on Wednesday evening, May 27th, to Shelburne on June 3rd and to Laurel on June 4th.

A meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Nelson Black, The Maples, on Friday afternoon, May 29th, beginning at 2.30 o'clock. The meeting is for the purpose of organizing a Branch of the Women's Institute. All the ladies of the neighborhood are cordially invited. A short programme will be furnished.

HOLIDAY LACROSSE

Dufferins Made Good Showing Against Fergus Thistles on Victoria Day.

Green-Shirted Visitors Were in Lead Until Third Quarter

That Orangeville has a real lacrosse team again was fully demonstrated on Monday when the locals travelled to Fergus and threw a good-sized scare into the intermediate team of that place, leading them until well into the third quarter when lack of condition began to tell and the home team forged to the front. Fergus changed a number of players during the game and this fact left them in better condition than the Dufferins, the fresh men adding considerable strength to their team.

For Orangeville everybody played well, and it would be hard to pick out any stars. Ewing put up his usual brilliant game, but was somewhat handicapped by lack of condition, and a new stick which he was using. When "Bill" gets his stick broke in it will be a very busy defence man that watches him. Keith is the best stick handler on the team and it is a treat to see "Hutch" handle the ball. Patterson is also not as aggressive as some of the others, he plays a good steady game and does not back away from anybody. Burnside also lacked condition, but his experience and aggressiveness more than made up for this and his all-round generalship was just what is wanted to round up the home end of the team. Stevenson at centre had a hard place to fill. This is not only the hardest worked position but on the holiday he had one of the best centre players in the league, in Chapman, to watch. "Stevie," who has wonderfully improved in stick-handling since last year, held him to the King's taste. The encouraging part of the game was the way the whole team passed and caught—no fumbling or hesitation, but straight and clean passes and good heady work marked their play throughout the day. The defence as usual was good and while it lasted had the Fergus home looking every way for a chance to score. Dedrick played the best game of his career, watching his man closely, besides going down on the home and getting two of the four goals for the locals. He is the right man in the right place. Desmore has improved over previous years. He played a good game on the holiday and deserves a lot of credit for the manner in which he held his check. There is no harder or cleaner check on the team than "Dobbie." Charlie Morrison is a great student and plays with his head all the time. No one passes "Charlie." He is always in the right spot at the right time. Bert Booth played at point and for three parts of the game was a tower of strength, but after that he could not stand the pace. With Booth in shape to go the full distance Orangeville's chances for the intermediate honors are good. Bill Henderson in goal stopped everything in sight for the first part of the game and everything he had a chance at afterwards, but toward the last Fergus began to get in close and nobody could stop the ones "Bill" missed. For a youngster Henderson is a wonder and when he gets a little more experience will be a hard man to beat for the position.

For Fergus, Mitchell at inside home was the bright particular star, and his work in the last two quarters was responsible for his team's win. Brown was also good and is a hard man to watch. On the defence Chapman at point and Calder in goal were the stars. Calder is a clever player and when he is playing in luck as he certainly was on Monday is a great goaler.

Orangeville missed the goal on a number of occasions by inches and also hit the post three times. When the luck changes and these close ones count look out for the Dufferins.

Cadet Inspection.

The annual inspection of the Orangeville Cadets will be held on the High School campus, Thursday (today). The Inspecting Officer will be Major Marshall, organizer and inspector of the Second Division. The annual inspection of the Cadets has always proven to be a very interesting affair. A healthy rivalry exists between the corps of the High and Public Schools. We hope the citizens will turn out in large numbers to show their appreciation of the hard work of our children in their useful drill.

Cured Diseases of the Kidneys

And is Depended On to Right Stomach and Liver Disorders.

Once Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are introduced into the family and their efficiency becomes known they are usually found too valuable to do without. For everyday ills arising from liver and bowel disorders they bring relief promptly, and when complicated diseaseff of the kidneys and liver develop they often prove a successful cure after doctors have failed. As an illustration, you may read the following, which was received a few days ago:

Mrs. John Wright, 53 McGee street, Toronto, Ont., states: "We have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for ten years, and would not be without them. My husband suffered from kidney trouble, and after taking treatment from several doctors without receiving any benefit, tried Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which worked a complete cure. Since that time we have used them for all stomach and liver disorders."

45 PER CENT.

Of Farms of Ontario are Mortgaged to Some Extent.

But Mortgages Represent Only 15 per cent. of Total Value of Farm Property.

The Annual Report of the Ontario Department of Agriculture has this to say regarding rural financial conditions in Ontario:—

"In regard to rural finance, a letter was addressed to the District Representatives, of whom we have now thirty-seven located in thirty-seven different centres in the Province, asking them to secure what information they could on this subject, especially with reference to the following points:

"1. The percentage of farms mortgaged and per cent. of mortgage on value of farms, and whether increasing or decreasing.

"2. The extent of deposits by farmers in savings banks.

"3. The extent of the demand on the part of farmers for loans.

"4. Rate of interest paid both on long and short time loans.

"5. Whether the loans are on the purchasing of land only or for financing farm operations.

"In gathering this information they conferred with bankers, business men, lawyers, registry office officials and prominent farmers. As is well known, men of this type are usually in close touch with the conditions of their communities, both by reason of their position and by reason of the fact that they have lived a long time in the district. The information which has thus been secured should, therefore, be reasonably reliable.

"Answers to the first question pertaining to mortgages elicited the fact that about 45 per cent. of the farms of the Province are mortgaged to some extent, and that one-third would be a fair estimate of the amount which the mortgage represents to the total value of the property. This means that mortgages against farm property in the Province represent only about 15 per cent. of the total value of farm property, which must be taken as a very encouraging sign. Moreover, a considerable percentage of these mortgages are held by farmers. Opinions were also unanimous that mortgages are steadily decreasing. Practically every country reported that payments were being kept up very promptly and a large number of mortgages were being wiped off each year. In many cases it was pointed out that mortgages, while they are frequently taken as a barometer of prosperity, are not altogether an unhealthy sign, as many are placed in order to secure money to extend the land holdings, erect buildings, plant out orchards, put in under-drainage, or effect other improvements which were in the nature of investment. In a few cases, unfortunately, it was reported that mortgages had been placed on farms in order to raise money for speculation in real estate, and that there are too many indications that a great deal of money of Ontario farmers has been used for this purpose and has not brought the returns anticipated.

"In the matter of deposits of farmers there was also a unanimity of opinion that these had increased materially in recent years. In one county the bankers estimated that the deposits had increased from 20 per cent. to 30 per cent. in the last few years. In another county it was estimated that 70 per cent. to 90 per cent. of the money deposited in local banks was deposited by the farmers. Another county estimated that 75 per cent. of the farmers had savings running from $700 to $12,000 each. As to the total amount of deposits of farmers' money, only a general estimate can, of course, be given. One county estimated that between three and four million dollars of farmers' money was deposited in the local branch banks, while other estimates ranged from two to five million dollars. Under these circumstances it would seem safe to estimate the total amount of farmers' deposits in rural Ontario at one hundred million dollars for the entire Province. While this may appear to be a very large figure, it should be remembered that the aggregate farm wealth of Ontario, including land, buildings, implements and live stock, is placed at $1,405,950,940 by the Bureau of Industries Report, and that a very large amount is required as a working capital in conducting the farm operations on a plant which represents such a large investment. This would only mean an average of about $700 per farm, but of course at the same time it is recognized that all the surplus money of the farmers is not deposited in the banks, although unquestionably a considerable proportion of it is.

"As to the demand on the part of farmers for loans, the consensus of opinion appeared to be that the demand was not very heavy, representing only a small portion of the total deposits. The banks, of course, do not loan money for the purchase of land, but the opinion is general that no farmer who enjoyed a good reputation and could give a reasonable [illegible] any difficulty in securing money needed to finance his farm operations, which was the chief purpose for which loans were sought. The rate of interest charged varied from 5½ per cent. on long-time loans to 7 per cent. on short-time loans, with occasionally rates of 8 per cent. and 10 per cent. in some of the newer districts. These figures were collected at the time when the money stringency was at its height and money generally was scarce, so that they would not represent normal conditions. In every instance it appeared that the farmers were able to secure financial accommodation on the same terms and basis as those engaged in other occupations.

"These facts would indicate that the financial conditions of the Province are sound, and that the outlook is healthful."

These demonstrations are proving their value by their growth in popularity. In 1912 a total of 50 demonstrations were held under the direction of the Provincial Apiarist. The average attendance at these was 26. Last year the number of demonstrations was sixty and the average attendance had increased to 42.

Going through the stable she passed White's bus, but did not touch the vehicle or the stalls on the other side. She escaped without injury and the light wagon to which she was hitched came through without any serious damage.

FEATURE MONKEY DEAD

Arthur Huston Sustains a Serious Loss.

Sorrow shrouds the Mozart Theatre to-day. Big Frisco, one of the most famous and intelligent monkeys in captivity, succumbed to acute indigestion about 10 o'clock this morning in the rear of the stage. Everything was done for the favorite pet and veterinary surgeons worked diligently to prevent death.

Frisco was eight years of age. He was the feature of the act depicting "Roosevelt in Africa," and Mr. Huston who reared him from a baby, said this morning he would rather pay $2000 in cash than lose Frisco.

Mr. Huston this morning said he would like to have the pet stuffed as a memento of the most intelligent monkey he had ever owned.—Elmira N.Y. Herald.

Mr. Huston also lost a trained Russian poodle that played the organ and performed other remarkable feats. On account of the losses Mr. and Mrs. Huston have been obliged to cancel $5000 worth of vaudeville bookings. They have gone to New York to buy more stock and will return to their home at Melville Cross to commence training.

Fortune of $400,000.

A nine year old boy, Alfred Gordon Buell Cameron, of 88 Crescent road, Toronto, has inherited a fortune of $400,000, accruing to the will of his grandfather, Alexander Cameron, the well-known Toronto lawyer, who died on May 15th, 1913. The boy's father, Alfred B. Cameron, and his mother, Luella, have applied to the Surrogate Court for letters of guardianship. Some $300,000 of the estate is held in securities and cash, and the balance in real estate.

Mrs. Alfred B. Cameron, the boy's mother, was a former Orangeville girl, being a daughter of Alexander Hughson, who resided on West Broadway until a few years ago.

TEETHING BABIES.

Teething time is usually a time of worry to mothers. It is usually accompanied by nervousness, stomach trouble and extreme restlessness. The mother can avoid all this; she can have her baby pass through the dangerous teething time without pain or crossness. Baby's Own Tablets are the mother's greatest friend at this time. They sweeten the stomach, regulate the bowels, allay feverishness which usually accompanies the coming of new teeth, and in this way make teething easy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Springing the Election.

To the Editor of The Banner.

Dear Sir

Knowing The Banner's policy of fair play and free speech I want to say a few words on the political situation in Dufferin.

It is a most unfair and high-handed act on the part of Sir James Whitney and his Cabinet to suddenly spring on a provincial election without giving the electors of the Province a chance to draw their breath. It is a fact well known to Sir James and his party followers from past experience that here in Dufferin, although looked upon as a Tory stronghold, the majority of the electors are out and out Independents, recruited from the ranks of the two old parties, who have become thoroughly disgusted with the tactics of the Tory party, so with the cunning of the practised politician an early election scheme is planned so as to take the Opposition, or Independents, by surprise. What chance have the farmers living in the back townships, many of whom never see a daily paper, to muster their forces, call a Convention and prepare for a general election when there is only a little over a week from the date of the announcement of the election and the day of nomination. It comes like a bolt from the blue or a dart in the dark. Since the late lamented Dr. Barr resigned his seat in the Legislature, provincial politics have gone from bad to worse, and so long as the farmers, who are the backbone and bulwark of the country, allow the present Star chamber to exist we need not look for any redress.

The Oil Excitement

Writing from Calgary to renew his subscription to The Banner, Mr. W. S. Waugh, a former resident of Orangeville, says, "We are in the midst of great excitement over oil discoveries. It is a little too soon to tell much about it, but indications are good. They have lots of very fine gasolene anyway, but oil is a little lower in the earth, if there, as I am told it is not found above sea level. The Dingman well is now about 2800 feet down and, where it is, is 3200 feet above sea level, so will have to wait until they get down to that. William Wallace was here last week and was very much interested in the excitement."

The 36th Regiment

Favorable recruiting reports are coming in from every Company and the prospects are that the 36th will go into camp at Niagara full strength this year.

There have been a number of changes in the staff of the Regiment. It is expected that these will prove beneficial. A new adjutant and sergeant-major have been appointed. Both men are enthusiasts and will devote both time and energy to the affairs of the Regiment.

Already quite a number of smart, well-built young men have signed to go to camp with the Orangeville Company. The officers expect to recruit the Company to full strength and feel that it is a matter of importance to do this on account of the pending changes in the Regiment. Persons, who are thinking about going to camp, should sign up now. By doing this they can help remove the uncertainty that usually exists until the last moment before leaving for camp. By joining now and making some effort to familiarize themselves with camp work and routine they can raise the standard of the Company.

The officers of the Orangeville Company are making arrangements to hold a church parade on Sunday, June 15th. The High and Public School Cadet Corps and bugle band will be invited to take part in the parade. If these corps decide to turn out the parade should be quite imposing.

The members of the 36th will go to camp in new khaki uniforms this year. The uniform looks smart and natty, the attractive effect being further heightened by the royal blue trimmings.

A strong bugle band has been organized to accompany the Regiment to camp this year. This is in addition to the regular regimental band, which will turn out as usual under the leadership of Bandmaster T. F. E. Clarridge.

A large marquee has been secured by the officers as a dining tent for the men while at camp. Dishes and other cooking utensils have also been procured, so that the wants of the inner man should be well looked after.

It is to be hoped that the Orangeville and Shelburne companies will go to camp full strength this year. This would be the best evidence that could be furnished the authorities of the existence of a healthy military spirit and would do much to further the organization of the new Regiment that is likely to be formed to take the place of the present 36th.

Mr. H. A. Dorrance, B.S.A., the genial and energetic representative of the Department of Agriculture, is going to Camp this year as a provisional lieutenant with the intention of qualifying for the rank of lieutenant. Mr. Dorrance is just the man for a lieutenancy and will make the class of officer that will help to build up the regiment.

The officers of the local Company will be in town frequently before Camp and will be pleased to meet and confer with men who may be thinking about going to Camp.

Has no greater Cooking Convenience than you can have on the Farm or in the Village

Cooking in a hot, stuffy kitchen on a sizzling hot wood or coal range in summer has probably made more women discontented with farm or village life than any one thing. She thinks of the gas stoves the city folk can cook on. We have a joyful message for these women.

The "Detroit" Vapor Gasolene Stoves

Work just like a city gas stove, so you do not have to be without the convenience of a city gas stove any longer, no matter where you live. No storage or pressure tanks needed. You can put the stove in any part of the kitchen. Simply light the burners and the stove is ready to cook on. We invite you to look at them, and we will give you a little book showing the different styles and sizes.

The Baby Did It

A Story of President Lincoln

By F. A. MITCHEL

"What's that?"

President Lincoln was sitting in his room at the White House dispatching the enormous business involved in the great struggle that he was directing, while his anteroom was crowded with those waiting their turn for—all they could expect—a few words with him. The door between him and these persons stood ajar, through which came the cry of a baby. The president ceased from his labors and listened. The cry was repeated. The work of administering a government with 1,000,000 soldiers in the field, struggling for its existence, was brought to a standstill by the cry of an infant.

Mr. Lincoln called an attendant, charged with the introduction of visitors, and asked him what it meant.

"A woman is waiting without who has been here two or three different days. She comes from a long distance and has to bring her child because she knows no one in Washington and has no place where she can leave it."

"YOU SHALL HAVE YOUR HUSBAND," HE SAID.

"Bring her in," the president directed.

A young woman poorly dressed carrying a child in her arms was ushered into the presence of the head of the nation—not the "august presence" by which we are accustomed to describe those who wield governmental power, but the presence of a long, thin man of large bone and a melancholy eye. Mr. Lincoln directed the messenger to hand the mother a seat beside him and asked:

"What can I do for you, my good woman?"

The visitor told her story, not in the words it is given here, for she would not have been able to give it as elaborately, and the government clock could not have been stopped long enough for her thus to tell it, but her words, spoken in a tremulous voice, interrupted occasionally by the fretting of her child, were doubtless far more effective than the following version:

In the spring of 1861, when the war drum was calling from the Atlantic to the Pacific for volunteers to fight for the Union cause, a regiment was drawn up in the state of Pennsylvania in column formation ready to march to the railway station to entrain for Washington. Just before the order "Forward!" was given a girl of twenty, carrying a small bundle, came running up to one of the companies looking eagerly for some one. Private Jack Williams waved his hand to her, and, approaching him, she handed him the bundle containing the last bit of food she could hope to prepare for him in many a month to come. There was not time for an embrace when the word "March!" rang out, the band struck up an inspiriting air, and the regiment moved away.

"Is that your sweetheart?" asked Williams' file closer of him as they marched to the tune of "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

"Sweetheart and wife," was the laconic reply.

Jack Williams, though he had been married but a few months, heard the call of President Lincoln for the 75,000 volunteers that constituted the first detachment of the great army for the Union and enlisted at the nearest recruiting station. One night in Virginia he was on picket duty, standing peering into the darkness for an enemy. Suddenly he felt his arms grasped from behind and a hand clapped over his mouth. His musket fell over in the long grass without sound. He was pushed forward until the picket line of which he had formed a part was left behind. Then a gruff voice said:

"Move on, Yank, if you don't want any lead in your noddle."

A very neat job of picket capture had been achieved by a single Confederate soldier.

The next morning, when the pickets were relieved, the officer of the retiring picket post where the capture had been made asked:

"Where's Williams?"

There was no reply to the question.

"Where's Williams?" the officer repeated, and, still receiving no answer, asked where he had been posted.

"Third man to the east of the pike," replied the sergeant, "between Rice and Kimball."

"Did either of you men hear anything of Williams during the night?" asked the officer of the men mentioned.

Both men replied that they had not.

"How far apart were the men posted?" asked the officer of the sergeant.

"On the west side of the pike I put them a hundred feet apart; on the east side I fell short of men and made it about two hundred. The ground was bad for a picket line; scrubby trees and bushes scattered irregularly."

"Gone over to the enemy," said the officer.

The name of Private John Williams was entered on the regimental rolls of his regiment as a deserter.

Meanwhile Williams was huddled in with other prisoners of war in the rear of the Confederate lines, awaiting transportation to Libby prison at Richmond. He spent some months there, when, the prison becoming crowded, a detachment of prisoners was sent to a stockade prison situated in South Carolina. Williams, with others in the same car with him—a freight car—laid a plan to escape. One of them had concealed a caseknife on his person and during the long hours of prison life had occupied his mind inventing ways to make a saw of it by nicking the edge. He had made poor headway until a fellow prisoner lent him a file. After that the matter was easy.

Williams and his friends in the freight car by means of the improvised tool managed to saw through a board in the floor of the car. When the train stopped during the night they removed the board and let themselves down through the aperture. Of three men who made the attempt two succeeded in getting away; the third was shot by the guard. Williams was one of the men who got away, but he and the other ran in different directions and did not come together again.

An account of the wanderings of Private Williams would be much the same as other escaped prisoners of war from '61 to '65. He traveled at night and was hidden by the negroes during the day. His compass was the north star. He suffered terribly from exposure and lived on berries, green corn and such other vegetable food as he could find except when some kind negro gave him a little corn pone.

Williams in order to escape detection took often to swamp lands. There he contracted fever, and when finally he dragged himself into the Union lines he was placed in a hospital.

It was about this time that the United States government was beginning to pay bounties to those who would enlist. This afforded an opportunity for criminals to secure the bounty and desert. Enough of this was done to attract the attention of the generals, and they sought to put a stop to it by trying the bounty jumpers for desertion and shooting them in presence of their comrades.

It was reported to the colonel of John Williams' regiment that a soldier was in hospital who had given that name on being received there. He became delirious, but was now better. The colonel directed the surgeon in charge of the hospital to send Williams to him under guard as soon as he was discharged.

What has been told here having been briefly stated to the president, the woman handed him a soiled letter to read. It had been dictated by her husband, who was lying ill at the time, to one of those self sacrificing women—both of the north and the south—who gave so much comfort to the sick and wounded of the war. It recounted his capture, his escape, his wandering and privations, ending with a pitiful request for her to come to him.

"I was helped to go to him by friends," she added, "and when I found him he told me that as soon as he was well enough he would be shot for desertion."

The poor woman had been told what was true. Her husband could at that time get no proof of the story he had to tell. His witnesses were all cut off from him by a bristling line of bayonets. And even if he could have been free to go to them he would not have been able to find the only witness who could clear him, the man who had captured him. His wife had appealed to his colonel for mercy, but he had set his teeth, resolved to stop desertion if he had to shoot every man in the army.

Such was the situation that was brought before Mr. Lincoln by the cry of a babe. And it would have been even more pathetic had the kind hearted president known when he heard it that the cry was an unconscious pleading for its father's life. Mr. Lincoln had no proof that the woman's story was true; he required no proof. He saw a woman pleading for her husband's life with his child in her arms, and he had no desire, no time, to investigate.

"You shall have your husband," he said, "and he shall have his pay, with leave of absence and transportation to his home."

The end of the scene was told in these words by the messenger who had introduced the woman to the president and was present during this interview of life and death:

"As he turned to his desk to write the order the poor woman absolutely lost consciousness of her surroundings in her joy and gratitude. She stood by the president's side, holding the baby on one arm, while with her disengaged one she gently stroked the president's ruffled hair, saying, 'God bless you; God bless you.'"

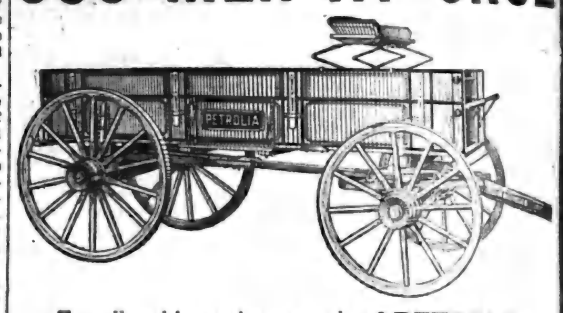
GOOD TIME TO BITE.

A farmer met a man at a railroad depot who asked him for a chew of tobacco. The farmer pulled out a plug and said: "Have you got a knife?"



"No," replied the man. "Have you any particular place where you want me to bite it?"

"Nope," said the farmer.

The man jumped aboard the moving train and yelled back: "All right, then, I'll bite it in the next town."—National Monthly.

OVERWORK AND WORRY

A Fruitful Source of Broken Down Constitution.

A little worry does a great deal of harm. Overwork and worry gives rise to headaches, nervousness, sleeplessness, weak back, lack of interest in your work, indigestion and sometimes a complete breakdown of the nervous system, leading to papalysis. If these are your symptoms you need a tonic. And the only way to tone up the nerves is through the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are a direct nerve tonic because they make new, rich, red blood, which feeds the nerves and strengthens every organ in the body. Under the tonic influence of these Pills nervousness and all the other evils of worry and overwork quickly disappear. They restore the digestion and enable the body to take full advantage from the food eaten.

Mrs. J. C. Chapman, Omemee, Ont., says: "I became completely rundown and my nervous system shattered from overwork and worry. I always felt tired and exhausted and slept badly at night. I tried several medicines but did not find the hoped for relief. Then I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I took them regularly for several months and they restored me to perfect health, and I have since been well and strong. I can recommend these Pills to any afflicted with nervousness or a broken constitution as I feel sure they will effect a cure."

These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or will be sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE BANNER

THE BANNER, JUNE 4th, 1914.

THE ST. LAWRENCE DISASTER.

Without a moment of warning Canada has been plunged into deep sorrow by the sinking of the great C. P.R. liner, the Empress of Ireland, which carried with her to a watery grave over one thousand souls. When we think of the grim tragedy of war, we never feel the poignant grief that has been occasioned by the loss of so many precious lives in the recent disaster within our shores. In war a man chooses his own fate, practically inviting the chance to die for the glory of it or for the defence of his country. But to be suddenly called to face one's Maker without warning, and not of one's own choice or fault, is a supreme test of human courage that surpasses the power of imagination, except in the case of those, who have been so unfortunate as to be called upon to experience the cruel ordeal.

Collisions and the foundering of ships will likely continue in spite of man's inventions and the precautionary measures he devises. In the case of the ramming of the Empress of Ireland, the circumstances and the handicaps against which the passengers were obliged to combat were most cruel. To begin with the passengers would be wearied after their long rail journeys to Quebec and the bustle and excitement which attend the sailing of an ocean liner. This would cause the shock of the collision to pass unnoticed by many of the sleeping people on the doomed boat. The most deadly circumstance was perhaps the lack of sufficient time to dress and get on deck, the failure of the lights adding to the uncertainty and confusion. It would be almost impossible for the uninitiated passenger to find the right exits in the darkness and with the vessel almost on her beam ends. The reason that so many of the crew were saved may be accounted for by the fact that their quarters were in the forecastle on the main and first decks, within easy call of the watch on deck and easy of egress. There is also the further fact that a large number of the crew would be on deck clearing the ship for sea, and would, at the time of the collision, be at their boat stations endeavoring to clear away the boats for launching. Most of the passengers on the side of the vessel on which the collision occurred would be caught like rats in a trap, on account of the ship listing into the water on that side.

There can be no doubt that some miscalculation was made as to speed and distance. According to the "rules of the road" in navigation the Empress of Ireland would be the boat to give way to the collier. The rule, by which the Liner would be governed, reads as follows :—

"If on your Starboard red appear,
It is your duty to keep clear;
To do as judgment says is proper
To Port, to Starboard, Back, or Stop Her."

In this case the Empress would be the boat to give way to the collier, which would be on the starboard of the liner.

The rule which the Storstad would use, if following the rules of navigation, would be :—

"If upon your Port is seen
A steamer's Starboard light of green,
There's nothing more for you to do
But see that green to Port keeps clear of you."

In this case the Storstad would keep her course, but it is possible she may have deviated from this rule. A Marine Court of Inquiry will no doubt place the blame where it belongs.

Although the sinking of the Empress of Ireland means a great loss financially in cargo, bullion and vessel, it is but as a grain of sand in a desert when compared with the loss of so many precious lives. In many cases whole families have been snuffed out. Only the relatives and friends who are touched by the sad disaster will know the sorrow of the tragedy. The rest of the world may only sympathize and sympathy in the fullest measure goes out to the many homes that have been so suddenly and so cruelly bereaved.

DUFFERIN POLITICS

Interest in Dufferin County politics is beginning to liven up with the approach of the Conservative convention on Friday. There is considerable speculation as to the probable outcome of the Convention. There will no doubt be many nominations and at least three of the nominees are almost certain to allow their names to go before the Convention. These are Mr. C. R. McKeown, the late representative, Mr. J. A. Cornelius, President of the County Association, and Mr. John Bryan. It is conceded that Messrs. Cornelius and Bryan have both developed considerable strength in the riding and have many friends who would be genuinely glad to see one or the other capture the Convention. Mr. McKeown's supporters are very sanguine of his success, some of his friends going so far as to predict that he will get the nomination on the first ballot. Everything of course depends on the men who are selected as delegates and when the names of these are known it will be a much easier matter to make a prediction respecting the probable outcome of the Convention.

Chief Marshall's New Uniform Looks Smart and Natty But Who Ordered It?

A bill from J. D. Torrie for $30 for a new uniform for Chief Marshall caused a spirited discussion at Monday night's meeting of the Town Council. The Council had not authorized any of the Committees to purchase the uniform. The Chief claimed that Deputy-Reeve Arnott had instructed him to buy the clothing but this statement was disputed by Mr. Arnott, who disclaimed responsibility in the matter. Eventually the account was referred to the Property Committee with instructions to pay if found correct. An account from J. R. Harcus for $1.70 was referred to the F. & W. Committee with power to pay.

The following accounts were passed by the Council :—The Pine River Light & Power Co., $138.53, passed at $131.38 ; Ambrose Clowes, $18.36; T. J. The Grand Valley Star & Vidette has completed its eighteenth year under the management of the present editor and publisher, Mr. W. Logan Craig. Reviewing the vicissitudes of fortune that the journal has experienced in that time, Mr. Craig has the satisfaction of being able to say that the Star & Vidette is more widely read now than at any other time since he assumed control. This is in itself proof that our cotem is fulfilling the mission of the local newspaper in its constituency. May it continue to increase in influence and prosperity.

Race for Mayoralty

Dr. Campbell and Reeve White have both announced that they will be candidates for the Orangeville mayoralty whenever Mayor Island resigns. The candidates are both strong men and a hot, exciting fight may be looked for. Dr. Campbell bases his claim on his four years' record and the fact that he was a candidate for Mayor a year ago last January. Mr. White points to his eight years' service under five Mayors, coupled with the fact that he is now reeve of the town.

The Entrance Exams.

The published statement that Principals of Public Schools had the power of recommending Entrance candidates and thereby securing their admission to High School without the usual examination is incorrect so far as Dufferin County is concerned. Students in this County will be required to write their examination as usual.

JUNE 29th

Is Date Fixed For Provincial Elections.

Sir James Whitney Has Announced Dissolution of Legislature.

The official announcement of the expected dissolution of the Ontario Legislature was made by Sir James Whitney on Friday night. Nominations will be held on June 22nd and the elections on June 29th.

"A proclamation has been issued dissolving the Legislature," stated the Prime Minister. "Nominations for a new Legislature will take place on the 22nd of June, and elections on the 29th. The Government having received information that the voters' lists will be ready, the uncertainty which has delayed action in this matter is removed, and writs will be issued in a day or two in accordance with the proclamation."

The Prime Minister's announcement was generally expected, and for the past two weeks there has been little doubt but that the 29th would see the parties facing each other at the polls. When the House was prorogued a month ago the members were given a warning to be ready for a contest the last week in June, which, of course, meant the last Monday of the month. The delay in getting started with the voters' lists in the unorganized districts made the result uncertain for a while, but since the proclamation was issued on May 9 the work of preparing the lists has been pushed with great vigor, and it is now assured that they will be ready in time.

The Legislature that has just gone out of existence was elected on December 11, 1911, and three sessions have been held since that time. The 2 preceding Legislatures put in three sessions, but in point of time it had a shorter life than the two preceding. The House that has just been dissolved had a membership of 106. Eighty-three of the members were Conservatives and 22 Liberals, the odd member being Alan Studholme, the Labor representative from East Hamilton. In the next House there will be 111 members, the increase being due to the addition of six ridings and the elimination of one as a result of the redistribution. While there were originally 22 Liberals in the House, the Opposition will go to the country with but eighteen seats in their possession. In the bye-elections they lost East Middlesex, and North Grey. Russell is vacant through the forced retirement of Gustave Evanturel and the redistribution bill has wiped out the Liberal constituency of Monck.

The Division Courts

The boundaries of the Division Courts of Dufferin are as follows :—(1) The town of Orangeville, the township of East Garafraxa, and all that part of the township of Amaranth lying south of the southern boundary of lot No. 26, in each concession of the township of Amaranth. (2) The village of Shelburne, the township of Melancthon, and all that portion of the township of Amaranth lying north of the southern boundary of lot No. 26, in each concession of the township of Amaranth. (3) The township of Mulmur. (4) The township of Mono, (5) The township of East Luther. The clerks and bailiffs are as follows :—1. J. M. Bennett, Joseph Hughes, Orangeville ; 2. W. H. Lamon, John Reburn, Shelburne ; 3. John Ferris, Stanton, John Armstrong, Earnscliffe ; 4. Robt. Orr, Wm. Irwin, Mono Mills ; 5. W. A. Wansbrough, J. I. Buchanan, Grand Valley.

In No. 1 Division Court last year 87 cases were entered, the claims amounting to $4,263.17 ; in No. 2 there were 83 cases, amounting to $2,683.86 ; in No. 3 there were 27 cases, amounting to $617.07 ; in No. 4 there were 3 cases, amounting to $260.03 ; in No. 5 there were 42 cases, amounting to $2,159.30.

The cases tried in the Division Courts are steadily growing fewer in number. The Banner has been told that in the early days it was not at all unusual for the Orangeville Division Court to last for several days. Now the monthly sitting of the Court seldom occupies more than a few hours. What is the reason for this great change? Is it, as the Shelburne Free Press suggests, because the people are getting better off and are able to pay their debts, or are they becoming more honest in the advancing years?

—Meetings were held throughout the County last night for the purpose of appointing delegates to the Conservative Convention in Shelburne on Friday.

ORANGEVILLE MAYORALTY

I desire to inform the electors of Orangeville that I will be a candidate for the position of Mayor, when the office becomes vacant through the expected resignation of Mayor Island. I have had eight years' municipal experience as a member of the Orangeville Council and have served under no less than five Mayors. I feel that my long record gives me a right to aspire to the Mayoralty, now that the position is about to be thrown open. I shall be grateful for your hearty support.

Yours Very Truly
J. J. WHITE.

CARD OF THANKS

I desire to take this means of tendering my hearty thanks to our neighbors and friends for their great kindness and sympathy during the illness and since the death of my husband.

VERANDAH COLLAPSED.

Mr. and Mrs. Herb Stuckey Injured in Georgetown Accident.

Ten persons were injured when the verandah of the Bennett House in Georgetown collapsed at noon on Friday under the weight of over a hundred persons who had gathered there to watch a circus parade. Numerous others fell from the verandah, but were not injured seriously enough to require medical attention.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Stuckey, of Caledon, were among the injured. Mrs. Stuckey had her right leg fractured and her husband had a couple of ribs cracked and was severely bruised about the side and thighs. Mr. and Mrs. Stuckey had gone to Georgetown in their car and Mr. Stuckey ran the car home again after his wife's injuries had received the attention of a doctor. At that time he did not think his injuries amounted to very much but next morning he was unable to get out of bed. He is about again now and Mrs. Stuckey is doing as well as can be expected.

Confusion reigned for a few minutes after the collapse, which came without warning. Following the crash there was a general run to the scene to pull out the injured. For some minutes it was thought there were several fatalities, but everyone as he was taken out showed signs of life and was taken inside the hotel, while hurried calls were sent in for doctors. Doctors Nixon and McAndrew of the town responded quickly. The long distance telephone was put in use, and Doctors Hall and Brydon, of Brampton, and Gray and Lake, of Acton, were called. R. J. Brooks, a young medical student, also did splendid work.

The parade had just started to pass up the main street, past the hotel, and there was a general rush to the point of vantage on the verandah. No sooner had the head of the procession passed the hotel than the top railing of the verandah gave way, precipitating those who had been hanging to it onto the sidewalk fourteen feet below. The railing in breaking, loosened one of the pillars holding up the floor, and it gave way, throwing many of those remaining into the street. This was followed by a deluge of boards, which showered onto the people below, and was responsible for many of the injuries. Some saved themselves by throwing themselves back against the wall and crawling through the windows. The only passage was by the door and the windows, but scores climbed back to safety.

William Farnell's Death.

Mr. William Farnell, a highly respected farmer, passed away at his home, lot 19, 4th line, Amaranth, about noon on Tuesday after a severe but comparatively short illness. Deceased had been feeling poorly for some months but was not seriously ill until four or five weeks ago. Since then he has been sinking rapidly. His death was caused by cancer of the bowels. The late Mr. Farnell, who was 56 years of age, was a son of Thomas Farnell, whose death occurred last April at the ripe age of 90 years. He was born near The Maples in East Garafraxa, where he farmed until March 1st, 1912, when he moved to the Currie farm in Amaranth. Thirty-two years ago he married Miss Harriet Cowling, a daughter of the late David Cowling, of East Garafraxa. The marriage, which proved a very happy one, was blessed by a family of thirteen children, twelve of whom, with the widow, survive. These are Mrs. G. M. Cruikshank, Mono, Mrs. Frank Rowley, Ballycroy, Mrs. Harry May, Amaranth, Miss Kate, of Toronto, Ruth, Thos. D., William J., Beatrice, Viola, Jessie, Murray and Lloyd at home. Thomas Farnell, O'Connell, Ont., James, of Wellington, Ont., Mrs. John Rolley, Penetanguishene, Mrs. Geo. Sanderson, Toronto, Mrs. John McLean, Palgrave and Mrs. Ed. J. Harper, Notre Dame, Sask., are the surviving brothers and sisters. The late Mr. Farnell was identified with the Methodist Church, was a prominent Orangeman, being a Past master of Jordan Hall L.O.L. No. 22, and was a staunch Conservative. He was a member of Court Gardiner No. 159, C.O.F. and also of Orangeville Council C.O.C.F. He was an honest, hard-working man, who was held in genuine respect by all who knew him. Sincere sympathy is felt for the bereaved widow and family. The funeral will be held to Greenwood cemetery at 1.30 o'clock this afternoon. There will be service at the house at 1 o'clock.

CRUDE CONDUCT.

An Adjala Ratepayer Criticises Township Council.

Editor Orangeville Banner

Dear Sir:

Would you kindly allow me space in your paper to express, in behalf of the respectable citizens of the township of Adjala the regret we feel over the way in which our Council used the Orangeville delegation, which visited them last Saturday to discuss the Hydro-Electric proposition. We, one and all, feel that the conduct of the Adjala Council on that occasion merits the most severe censure from the public, and stands out prominently as the first broken link in our long chain of good record for at least hospitality and sociability. The delegation was composed of gentlemen. They should have been used as such. It is to be hoped that the Reeve and Council will give some reasonable explanation and apologize to these gentlemen for their crude conduct. I am, Mr. Editor

Yours Very Sincerely
JAMES SHEEHAN.

A Purse of Gold.

On Monday night a Committee, representing the congregation of St. Andrew's Church, called upon Miss Beatrice Harshaw at her home and presented her with a purse of gold and the following appreciative address:—

Miss Beatrice Harshaw,
Orangeville.

Dear Miss Harshaw:

We, the members and adherents of St. Andrew's Congregation, Orangeville, have thought the eve of your approaching marriage to be a suitable time to show our appreciation of your work in many departments of Church service and more especially in connection with the service of song. Your assistance as a member of the choir, and as its leading soloist, has been simply invaluable, and it has been given with a faithfulness, constancy and efficiency that has gone far to make St. Andrew's choir unsurpassed in this part of the country. All choirs have their dark days as well as their bright ones, but your fine qualifications as a singer, your unceasing loyalty to the choir leader, and your wonderful regularity in attendance at all services have greatly assisted in carrying the choir safely through many critical periods, and have freed pastor and people from much anxiety. The poet of the Yukon has said that "a promise made is a debt unpaid," but the experience of many congregations has been that a promise to aid in the musical part of the church services is too frequently not regarded seriously. Yet in your case it may be said that the promise having been made the debt has been paid to the last farthing. Besides, the services you have so cheerfully and ably rendered have been given without any thought of remuneration. We, as a congregation, can never pay the debt we owe you, but we wish you to accept this purse of gold as an indication of our recognition of your valuable work, and a slight token of our gratitude. We pray that the Giver of all good may grant you health, happiness, prosperity and length of days to continue your good work for Him.

Signed on behalf of the congregation,

J. S. Robertson
J. E. Smith.

Miss Harshaw has been a member of St. Andrew's Church Choir for nine years and has been the leading soloist for the greater part of that time. Her services will be very much missed by the choir and congregation.

Haddock-McMullen.

The marriage of Mr. Samuel David Haddock, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Haddock, of Relessey, and Miss Edna Pearl McMullen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter McMullen, was celebrated at the home of the bride's parents near Sheldon at 5 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, May 27th. The interesting ceremony was solemnized by Rev. J. W. Dudgeon, of Rosemont, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. The happy couple took their places under an arch of evergreens, flowers and wedding bells. The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a becoming gown of shadow lace over white satin, with bridal veil caught with orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of white carnations. Her bridesmaid, Miss Emma McMullen, was dressed in white embroidered crepe and carried pink carnations and maiden hair fern. Another sister, Miss Aggie McMullen, who acted as ring bearer, was dressed in pink crepe. Mr. John J. Aikens, a cousin of the groom, was the best man. The bridal chorus was played by Miss Esther McMullen. After receiving the congratulations of the assembled friends at the close of the service the happy couple led the way to the dining room where a dainty wedding repast was served. The decorations in this room were pink and white roses and ferns. The bride received a large number of beautiful wedding presents. The groom's gift was a gold watch and chain, to the bridesmaid a bar pin and to the groomsman a pair of gold cuff links. The bride's going away dress was of blue cloth with hat to match. There were about 125 guests present. Among some of the friends from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. David and Miss Cora McMullen and Mr. and Mrs. W. Crawford, of Sleswick; Mr. and Mrs. G. McMullen, Norman, Sam and Jennie McMullen, of Mono Mills; Mr. and Mrs. James Lipsett and Mr. John Lipsett, Palgrave; Mr. and Mrs. Holmes, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. Arch Irwin and Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Holmes and family, Orangeville. The good wishes of many friends go with the happy couple to their new home.

SHOT MAD BULLOCK.

Steer Ran Amuck in Owen Sound Causing Great Excitement.

On Saturday morning a mad bullock caused more than a little excitement, gave several of the leading citizens some cowboy work, and finally some rifle practice before the distracted bovine was finally despatched. The steer was brought into town on Saturday morning by Mr. A. Garvie, of Derby, being one of a bunch. They were driven down to the yards at the C.P.R. This particular two-year old was being led up to Wyllie's slaughter houses and when near Seventh street he suddenly erected his tail and set out with blood in his eye and no grass clinging to his hoofs. And after him, full-tilt, went a half-dozen or more men, this number being augmented as the chase progressed until, with the ubiquitous small boy and all, there were over a score in the pursuit. The steer stopped for nothing and by his maddened appearance daunted any of those who might have thought of stopping him or heading him off. It was apparent that he was going to cause trouble and before he had gone far the advisability of getting someone to take a shot at him was mooted. P. C. Carson joined in the pursuit as it progressed and the steer got to the Jubilee Bridge. He did not care to go further south and turned aside into Mr. Wilson's yard. Here it was that some were for taking a shot at him. But the constable would not listen to the suggestion, there being the danger that he would do injury to something else than the steer, because there was no safe background. Here several of the pursuers considered it safe to take to the trees like the primitive man rather than face the charge of the infuriated bullock. He was chased out of this lot finally and went on up Fifth street until the foot of the hill was reached. There he turned off to Fourth avenue. A, east, for further explorations. And there it was that he almost came to an instant end. P. C. Carson, armed with a military rifle drew a bead on him carefully aiming to strike him at a point below the horns and between the eyes. But, alas! the rifle had not been sighted for close range work and the bullet went a shade high stinking Mr. Steer about an inch below the top of the skull and coming out at the back of the neck. It only dazed him and made him wilder than ever. He came out on Fifth avenue and came south until he got up on the hillside at the end of Fifth street. Fill in the tale with about a score of most excited followers, and imagine incessant shouting and scurrying, probably it was no wonder the steer was so enraged. But on this hillside he came, as it were, to the end of his tether. He fell before the deadly aim of no mere constable shooting with a badly ranged rifle, but to the prowess of Town Clerk Charles Gordon who had arrived on the scene with his trusty implement of destruction. The bullet struck the steer just abaft of the front shoulder about a foot up and if it did not hit him in the heart it did the work just as well for the chase ended right there. Mr. Ed. Parsons, who was among the spectators, bled the beef at once and now he is good sirloin and steak at something over twenty cents per pound.—Owen Sound Times.

MRS. MABEN WAS MADE WELL

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Wants Other Suffering Women To Know It.

Murfreesboro, Tenn. — "I have wanted to write to you for a long time to tell you what your wonderful remedies have done for me. I was a sufferer from female weakness and displacement and I would have such tired, worn out feelings, sick headaches and dizzy spells. Doctors did me no good so I tried the Lydia E. Pinkham Remedies — Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash. I am now well and strong and can do all my own work. I owe it all to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and want other suffering women to know about it."— Mrs. H. E. MABEN, 211 S. Spring, St., Murfreesboro, Tenn.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for nearly forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Why Lose Hope.

No woman suffering from any form of female troubles should lose hope until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

THE MYSTERY OF INFLUENCE.

A visitor from another planet where conditions were unlike our own, would find the phenomenon of vegetation as manifested upon our earth, taxing to the credulity. It would be hard to make him believe that there was any close connection between the acorn and the oak tree, that the tiny thing buried in the soil, would by virtue of its own vital force, aided by sun and rain, become the monarch of the forest.

Unthinking people deny the power of influence. They ask how is it possible for a word, a simple friendly act to become a dominating force that will save a life from ruin. The mystery of influence, like the mystery of the seed, is inexplicable, but that does not alter the facts in the case. We cannot explain how the acorn becomes an oak, but that this transformation does take place we can testify unhesitatingly. We do not know why influence, exerted consciously or unconsciously, is the most potent force in character making, but every observer knows that it is so. If we waited to build a bridge of logic from the seed to the harvest, the world would go hungry.

NOTES OF INTEREST.

Matters of Information Gleaned from Report of Department of Agriculture.

Gleanings That Tell of Progress in Old Ontario.

The following items of interest are gleaned from the Report of the Ontario Department of Agriculture issued recently :—

Women's Institutes total over 800, with 25,000 members.

There are now over 200 farmers' clubs in the Province.

Horticultural societies now have a total membership of 14,000.

The total attendance at Farmers' and Women's Institutes last year totalled 367,759.

Over 290,000 annual reports of the Department and its various branches were distributed last year.

During 1912 Ontario shipped about 238,000 barrels of apples west, or about 48 per cent. of the total imports.

For the field crop competitions in 1913, 159 societies entered 3,500 competitors with 35,000 acres in crops.

There are now thirty-seven permanent District Representatives of the Department located in thirty-seven counties."

Acre-profit competitions were inaugurated last year to show the possibilities of cultivation from a financial standpoint.

Lightning rods, properly installed, are declared by the Professor of Physics at the O.A.C. to be a protection to buildings.

Last year 2,800 infected or diseased trees in orchards were ordered destroyed by inspectors of the Department of Agriculture.

Experiments at the Agricultural College show that dandelions in lawns are killed by a spray made of a solution of iron sulphate.

Factory inspection is under the jurisdiction of the Department, and the inspectors last year made 7,348 inspections, covering 5,084 industries.

Sixty-nine school fall fairs were held last fall, representing 531 schools in 31 counties, with an entry list of 18,652 and an attendance of 33,875.

Seventy-five per cent. of the students at the College are from Ontario, and 95 per cent. of the students at the College go back to the land.

Pearce's Improved Tree Bean gave the highest yield per acre at the Agricultural College, both in the fourteen and the five year tests of field beans.

Bee-keeping is receiving increased attention, and the Department has on its mailing list the addresses of 8,000 who are understood to be keeping bees.

Four million fruit trees in the nurseries in the Niagara Peninsula were examined last year for San Jose scale, all infested stock being destroyed.

A herd of dairy Shorthorns was purchased in England by the College, to demonstrate the possibilities of combining beef and milk from one animal.

Chemical analysis are being made at the College of the swamp and peat areas of the Province, with a view to making them productive as market gardens.

The spraying of fruit trees is now so widely practiced that where once one factory was sufficient to meet the demand for supplies, there are now nine companies engaged in the business.

Had No Power Over the Limbs

Locomotor Ataxia, Heart Trouble and Nervous Spells Yielded to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

It would be easy to tell you how Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures locomotor ataxia and derangements of heart and nerves, but it may be more satisfactory to you to read this letter.

Mrs. Thos. Allan, R.F.D. 3, Sombra, Ont., writes :—"Five years ago I suffered a complete breakdown, and frequently had palpitation of the heart. Since that illness I have had dizzy spells, had no power over my limbs (locomotor ataxia) and could not walk straight. At night I would have severe nervous spells, with heart palpitation, and would shake as though I had the ague. I felt improvement after using the first box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and after continuing the treatment can now walk, eat and sleep well, have no nervous spells and do not require heart medicine. I have told several of my neighbors of the splendid results obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co. Limited, Toronto.

Ontario received $195,000 last year from the Dominion Government to assist the Department of Agriculture in its work of instruction and demonstration.

About 45 per cent. of the farms have mortgages against them, and these mortgages represent only about 15 per cent. of the total value of the farm property.

The average yields of crops grown at the College for thirteen years are nearly double the yields of similar crops grown throughout the Province for thirty years.

"Buy from Ontario what you cannot produce yourself," was the slogan of an advertising campaign carried on by the Department of Agriculture last year in the West.

The appointment of a Provincial Entomologist has resulted in a great improvement in the conditions of the orchards and nurseries, particularly in the Niagara peninsula.

During 1913 nearly 2,000 people were served, under the auspices of Women's Institutes, by courses in 'Food Values in Cooking,' 'Home Nursing,' and 'Sewing.'

Following the recommendation of the Colonization Branch of the Department, more farmers are hiring help by the year, thus doing much to solve the farm labor problem.

Reports of co-operative work in the destruction of weeds show that the growing of rape has been fairly successful in eradicating Perennial Sow Thistle and Twitch Grass.

Experiments on the Agricultural College plots show that a mixture of barley and oats will give better results in feeding than either one of these grains when fed alone.

The Department has charge of the certificating of stationary engineers, of whom 1,138 were examined last year, making the total number of certificated engineers nearly 8,000.

Two new varieties of oats have been developed by the College which ripen earlier and give heavier yields than the average varieties. These are O.A.C. No. 72 and O.A.C. No. 3.

The freshman class at the Ontario Agricultural College for the current year totalled 225, an increase of 40 per cent. over the previous year and practically double that of ten years ago.

In addition to grants to the Winter Fairs at Guelph and Ottawa, the Department assisted twelve local horse shows and forty-four poultry shows on behalf of the live stock industry.

Short courses in stock and seed judging are increasing in popularity, and eighty-eight such courses were held last year under the auspices of the Department of Agriculture.

A new Field Husbandry Building for the Ontario Agricultural College, one room of which accommodates 400 students, will be ready for occupation during the coming academic year.

Winners in acre-profit competitions conducted in twenty-six counties were given a two weeks' course at the Ontario Agricultural College in seed and stock judging, free of all expense.

Eighteen municipalities last year appointed local inspectors under the Fruit Pests Act, twenty-eight men being employed in examining trees in the orchards for Scale, Yellows and Little Peach.

The growing of alfalfa is to be encouraged by the sowing of hardy seed in demonstration plots in various counties, under the direction of the Professor of Field Husbandry at the College.

Several samples of water from farm and rural school wells, chemically tested at the Agricultural College, proved again that a large percentage of the wells supply water which is unfit for human use.

For the first time a Rural Education Conference was held at the Agricultural College last year, and it was attended by eighty school inspectors and 129 school teachers during the week it was in session.

For inspection of orchards under the Fruit Pests Act the municipalities spent $3,000 last year, half of which was refunded by the Government, and the Department of Agriculture, on its own account, spent $10,000 on this work.

Last year the Ontario Vegetable Growers' Association developed the plan of co-operative buying through its branches, and appointed a co-operative purchasing agent, thereby securing seed and supplies at greatly reduced prices.

In potato experiments at the Ontario Agricultural College in the last five years the Extra Early Eureka has made the best record in the early varieties, and the Davies Warrior, Empire State and Rural New Yorker No. 2 in the late or general varieties.

Experiments at the College with four varieties of oats over a five-year period proved that the maximum yield from large plump seed exceeded those from small, plump seed by 90 per cent. of the tests.

To kill loose smut of oats and stinking smut of wheat, the best results were obtained at the College from grain immersed for twenty minutes in a solution made up of one-half pint of formalin to twenty-one gallons of water.

'Prelude,' the new variety of spring wheat originated on the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, was grown on the Agricultural College plots for the first time last season, and while much earlier than any other variety, was comparatively light, yielding only 23.3 bushels to the acre.

To make the work of agricultural fair judges more efficient, a short course was given at the Agricultural College, Guelph, for the men of Western Ontario, and at the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, for those of Eastern Ontario.

Practical demonstrations of drainage work by a ditching machine, under the direction of members of the Agricultural College staff, have been a success, notably in portions of Haldimand, where it has always been held that the land was 'undrainable.'

Thirty varieties of farm crops grown continuously at the College from nineteen to twenty-five years without any change of seed show larger yields in recent years than in the earlier part of this experiment, showing the disadvantage of frequent change of seed, provided care is taken in selection.

In the experimental work at the Agricultural College with the pea crop, the Early Britain variety gave the highest yield of grain per acre in the fourteen-year test, but was slightly surpassed in the five-year test by No. 20,467, a variety obtained from the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington, but not yet otherwise grown in Ontario.

WHITE PINE GROWING IS PROFITABLE.

Six per cent. Compound Interest may be Earned in about Fifty Years.

The growing of white pine, according to a U. S. government bulletin recently issued on the subject, is a profitable undertaking, returning 6 per cent. compound interest if the trees are cut when not more than from 35 to 70 years old.

The original white pine forests are approaching exhaustion, and, with the growing scarcity of large-sized, high-grade white pine lumber, lower grades now find a ready market. In addition, the tree grows rapidly, has a heavy yield, and is easy to manage.

Second-growth white pine, 50 years old, on good soil, may yield as much as 49,000 board feet of lumber per acre; on medium soil 36,000 feet; and even on poor soil, 24,000 feet. White pine boxboard lumber, one of the chief products of such stands, sells from $12 to $18 a thousand board feet. Material for making matches, another product, sells for from $17 to $18 a thousand. Even larger material, suitable for sashes and blinds, some of which may be cut from a 50-year old stand, brings from $30 to $35 a thousand feet. Second-growth white pine, the kind that is found on thousands of abandoned fields and pastures in the eastern part of Canada and the United States, and which has sprung up in many places after the original white pine forests have been cut out, has a value to-day that makes it well worth the attention of the owner.

The best second-growth white pine, 45 years old, will yield about 42,000 board feet per acre, but the same stand, when 55 years old, will yield 55,000 feet, an increase of 13,000 feet per acre in 10 years. In addition, with the increase in quality, not only more, but better timber is to be had. Including this factor of quality, the lumber from an acre of best white pine, 55 years old, is worth about $1,000 against a value of $750 when the stand is 45 years old.—Ex.

is the dairyman's surest dividend payer. It keeps ensilage in just the right condition and does not permit it to dry out or get mouldy. A concrete silo cannot leak, rot, rust or dry out. It has no hoops to replace. Requires no paint and needs no repairs during an ordinary lifetime.

Send to-day for this free book "What the Farmer Can do With Concrete." It tells how to build a concrete silo and many other things on the farm that will save you many dollars.

Exclusive to the Last.

An instance of exclusiveness maintained under difficulties is reported from the ladies' cabin of an Atlantic liner. All were sick except one lady and a cat, which wandered uneasily about. The lady ventured to stroke the cat, remarking, "Poor pussy." The cat was inclined to respond and elevated its tail in token of good will, when from a neighboring berth came in choking tones the words, "Excuse me, that is a private cat!"

Wilde and Ouida.

Oscar Wilde once asked Ouida what she herself considered the chief feature in her work which won success. "I am the only living English writer," she replied, "who knows how two dukes talk when they are by themselves!" It might with truth be said of Wilde that he was the only living English writer who knew how two duchesses talk when they are by themselves.—From Archibald Henderson's "European Dramatists."

Making It Easy.

"Your daughter plays nothing but classical music."

"Yes," replied Mrs. Cumrox. "It is better so. If she plays only classics we can't be sure whether what annoys us is her performance or the composition itself."—Washington Star.

Has no greater Cooking Convenience than you can have on the Farm or in the Village

Cooking in a hot, stuffy kitchen on a sizzling hot wood or coal range in summer has probably made more women discontented with farm or village life than any one thing. She thinks of the gas stoves the city folk can cook on. We have a joyful message for these women.

The "Detroit" Vapor Gasolene Stoves

Work just like a city gas stove, so you do not have to be without the convenience of a city gas stove any longer, no matter where you live. No storage or pressure tanks needed. You can put the stove in any part of the kitchen. Simply light the burners and the stove is ready to cook on. We invite you to look at them, and we will give you a little book showing the different styles and sizes.

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER XIV.—continued.

Anna nodded, and Mr. Earles attended her obsequiously to the door. She descended the stairs, and found herself at last in the street—alone. It was a brief solitude, however. A young man, who had been spending the last hour walking up and down on the opposite side of the way, came quickly over to her. She looked up, and recognized Mr. Brendon.

CHAPTER XV.

"He Will Not Forget!"

The external changes in Brendon following on his alteration of fortune were sufficiently noticeable. From head to foot he was attired in the fashionable garb of the young man of the moment. Not only that, but he carried himself erect—the slight slouch which had bent his shoulders had altogether disappeared. He came to her at once, and turning, walked by her side.

"Now I should like to know," she said, looking at him with a quiet smile, "what you are doing here? It is not a particularly inspiring neighborhood for walking about by yourself."

"I plead guilty, Miss Pellissier," he answered at once. "I saw you go into that place, and I have been waiting for you ever since."

"I am not sure whether I feel inclined to scold or thank you," she declared. "I think as I feel in a good humour it must be the latter."

He faced her doggedly.

"Miss Pellissier," he said, "I am going to take a liberty."

"You alarm me," she murmured, smiling.

"Don't think that I have been playing the spy upon you," he continued. "Neither Sydney nor I would think of such a thing. But we can't help noticing. You have been going out every morning, and coming home late—tired out—too tired to come down to dinner. Forgive me, but you have been looking, have you not, for some employment?"

"Quite true!" she answered. "I have found out at last what a useless person I am—from a utilitarian point of view. It has been very humiliating."

"And that, I suppose," he said, waving his stick toward Mr. Earle's office, "was your last resource."

"It certainly was," she admitted. "I changed my last shilling yesterday."

He was silent for a moment or two. His lips were tight drawn. His eyes flashed as he turned toward her.

"Do you think that it is kind of you, Miss Pellissier," he said almost roughly, "to ignore your friends so? In your heart you know quite well that you could pay Sydney or me no greater compliment than to give us just a little of your confidence. We know London, and you are a stranger here. Surely our advice would have been worth having, at any rate. You might have spared yourself many useless journeys and disappointments, and us a good deal of anxiety. Instead, you are willing to go to a place like that where you ought not to be allowed to think of showing yourself."

"Why not?" she asked quietly.

"The very question shows your ignorance," he declared. "You know nothing about the stage. You haven't an idea what sort of employment you could get there would be like, the sort of people you would be mixed up with. It is positively hateful to think of it."

She laid her fingers for a moment upon his arm.

"Mr. Brendon," she said, "if I could ask for advice, or borrow money from any one, I would from you—there! But I cannot. I never could. I suppose I ought to have been a man. You see, I have had to look after myself so long that I have developed a terrible bump of independence."

"Such independence," he answered quickly, "is a vice. You see to what it has brought you. You are going to accept a post as chorus girl, or super, or something of that sort."

"You do not flatter me," she laughed.

"I am too much in earnest," he answered, "to be able to take this matter lightly."

"I am rebuked," she declared. "I suppose my levity is incorrigible. But seriously, things are not so bad as you think."

He groaned.

"They never seem so at first!" he said.

"You do not quite understand," he said gently. "I will tell you the truth. It is true that I have accepted an engagement from Mr. Earles, but it is a good one. I am not going to be a chorus girl, or even a super. I have never told you so, or Sydney, but I can sing—rather well. When my father died, and we were left alone in Jersey, I was quite a long time deciding whether I would go in for singing professionally or try painting. I made a wrong choice, it seems—but my voice remains."

"You are really going on the stage, then?" he said slowly.

"In a sense—yes."

Brendon went very pale.

"Miss Pellissier," he said, "don't."

"Why not?" she asked, smiling. "I must live, you know."

"I haven't told any one of the amount," he went on. "It sounds ridiculous. But I have two hundred thousand pounds. Will you marry me?"

Anna looked at him in blank amazement. Then she burst into a peal of laughter.

"My dear boy," she exclaimed. "How ridiculous! Fancy you with all that money! For heaven's sake, though, do not go about playing the Don Quixote like this. It doesn't matter with me, but there are at least a dozen young women in Mr. Earles' waiting room who would march you straight off to a registrar's office."

"You have not answered my question," he reminded her.

"Nor am I going to," she answered, smiling. "I am going to ignore it. It was really very nice of you, but to-morrow you will laugh at it as I do now."

"Is it necessary," he said, "for me to tell you ——"

"Stop, please," she said firmly.

Brendon was silent.

"Do not force me to take you seriously," she continued. "I like to think of your offer. It was impulsive and natural. Now let us forget it."

"I understand," he said, doggedly.

"And you must please not look at me as though I were an executioner," she declared lightly. "I will tell you something if you like. One of the reasons why I left Paris and came to London was because there was a man there who wanted me to marry him. I really cared for him a little, but I am absolutely determined not to marry for some time at any rate. I do not want to get only a second-hand flavour of life. One can learn and understand only by personal experience, by actual contact with the realities of life. I did not want anything made smooth and easy for me. That is why I would not marry this man whom I did and whom I do care for a little. Later on—well then the time may come. Then perhaps I shall send for him if he has not forgotten."

"I do not know who he is," Brendon said quietly, "but he will not forget."

Anna shrugged her shoulders lightly.

"Who can tell?" she said. "Your sex is a terrible fraud. It is generally deficient in the qualities it prides itself on most. Men do not understand constancy as women do."

Brendon was not inclined to be led away from the point.

"We will take it then," he said, "that you have refused or ignored one request I have made you this morning. I have yet another. Let me lend you some money. Between comrades it is the most usual thing in the world, and I do not see how your sex intervenes. Let me keep you from that man's clutches. Then we can look out together for such employment—as would be more suitable for you. I know London better than you, and I have had to earn my own living. You cannot refuse me this."

He looked at her anxiously, and she met his glance with a dazzling smile of gratitude.

"Indeed," she said, "I would not. But it is no longer necessary. I cannot tell you much about it, but my bad times are over for the present. I will tell you what you shall give me, if you like."

"Well?"

"Lunch! I am hungry—tragically hungry."

"After all," he said, "I am not sure that you are not a very material person."

"I am convinced of it," she answered. "Let us go to that little place at the back of the palace. I'm not half smart enough for the West End."

"Wherever you like!" he answered, a little absently.

They alighted at the restaurant, and stood for a moment in the passage looking into the crowded room. Suddenly a half stifled exclamation broke from Anna's lips. Brendon felt his arm seized. In a moment they were in the street outside. Anna jumped into a waiting hansom.

"Tell him to drive—anywhere," she exclaimed.

Brendon told him the name of a distant restaurant and sprang in by her side. She was looking anxiously at the entrance to the restaurant. The commissionaire stood there, tall and imperturbable. There was no one else in the doorway. She leaned back in the corner of the cab with a little sigh of relief. A smile flickered upon her lips as she glanced towards Brendon, who was very serious indeed. Her sense of humour could not wholly resist his abnormal gravity.

"I am so sorry to have startled you," she said, "but I was startled myself. I saw some one in there whom I have always hoped that I should never have met again. I hope—I am sure that he did not see me."

"He certainly did not follow you out," Brendon answered.

"His back was towards me," Anna said. "I saw his face in a mirror. I wonder——"

"London is a huge place," Brendon said. "Even if he lives here you may go all your life and never come face to face with him again."

CHAPTER XVI.

"This is My Wife"

Anna, notwithstanding her momentary fright in the middle of the day, was in high spirits. She felt that for a time at any rate her depressing struggle against continual failure was at an end. She had paid her bill, and she had enough left in her purse to pay many such. Beyond that everything was nebulous. She knew that in her new role she was as likely as not to be a rank failure. But the relief from the strain of her immediate necessities was immense. She had been in the drawing room for a few minutes before the gong had sounded, and had chattered gaily to every one. Now, in her old place, she was doing her best thoroughly to enjoy a most indifferent dinner.

"Your brother has gone?" she asked Sydney, between the courses.

He nodded.

"Yes, David left this afternoon. I do not think that he has quite got over his surprise at finding you established here."

She laughed.

"After all, why should he be surprised?" she remarked. "Of course, one lives differently in Paris, but then—Paris is Paris. I think that a boarding house is the very best place for a woman who wants to develop her sense of humor. Only I wish that it did not remind one so much of a second-hand clothes shop."

Sydney looked at her doubtfully.

"Now I suppose Brendon understands exactly what you mean," he remarked. "He looks as though he did, at any rate. I don't! Please enlighten me."

She laughed gaily—and she had a way when she laughed of throwing back her head and showing her beautiful white teeth, so that mirth from her was a thing very much to be desired.

"Look round the table," she said. "Aren't we just odds and ends of humanity—the left overs, you know. There is something incongruous about us. We are amiable to one another, but we don't mix. We can't."

"You and I and Brendon get on all right, don't we?" Sydney objected.

"We may be exceptions," Anna answered. "We can't disprove the theory. Besides, I am thinking more of our relations with the rest of the world than with one another. There's old Mr. Carter, for instance. He has an evil temper, a wretched digestion and nothing beyond his pension. He's a left-over, and so he's drifted here. Then there's Mrs. Shaw. She has two married daughters, but their husbands are doing well and getting their noses into, at any rate, what they imagine to be society. Mrs. Shaw eats peas with her knife. Ergo, Mrs. Shaw remains here. She too is a left-over. Miss Ellicot and her mother have plenty of relatives. They won't have the girl to live with them because she wants to marry every man she meets, and isn't clever enough to hide it. Miss Ellicot too is a left-over."

"How about Brendon and me?" Sydney asked.

"You two? Oh, you don't count. You are only boys!" Anna laughed.

"I am twenty-six years old," Brendon said, "and I object to being considered anything of the sort. I do not mind being called a left-over, but I object to not counting."

"Well then, you shall count for what you like," Anna answered good-humouredly, "but you are neither of you in the least like the ordinary boarding house young man. You don't wear a dinner coat with a flower in your buttonhole, or last night's shirt, or very glossy boots, nor do you haunt the drawing room in the evening, or play at being musical. Besides——"

She stopped short. She herself, and one other there, recognized the interposition of something akin to tragedy. A thickly-set, sandy young man, with an unwholesome complexion and grease-smooth hair, had entered the room. He wore a black tail coat buttoned tightly over his chest, and a large diamond pin sparkled in a white satin tie which had seen better days. He bowed awkwardly to Mrs. White, who held out her hand and beamed a welcome upon him.

"Now isn't this nice!" that lady exclaimed. "I'm sure we're all delighted to see you again, Mr. Hill. I do like to see old friends back here. If there's any one here whom you have not met I will make you acquainted with them after dinner. Will you take your old place by Miss Ellicot."

Miss Ellicot swept aside her skirts from the vacant chair and welcomed the newcomer with one of her most engaging smiles.

"We were afraid that you had deserted us for good, Mr. Hill," she said graciously. "I suppose Paris is very interesting, very distracting. You must come and tell me all about it, although I am not sure whether we shall forgive you for not having written to any of us."

Mr. Hill was exchanging greetings with his hostess, and salutations around the table.

"Thank you, ma'am. Glad to get back, I'm sure," he said briskly. "Looks like old times here, I see. Sorry I'm a bit late the first evening. Got detained in the City, and ——"

Then he met the fixed, breathless gaze of those wonderful eyes from the other side of the table, and he, too, broke off in the middle of his sentence. He breathed heavily, as though he had been running. His large, coarse lips drew wider apart. Slowly a mirthless and very unpleasant smile dawned upon his face.

"Great Scott!" he exclaimed huskily. "Why, —it's—it's you!"

Amazement seemed to dry up the torrents of his speech. The girl regarded him with the face of a Sphinx. Only in her eyes there seemed to be some apprehension of the fact that the young man's clothes and manners were alike undesirable things.

"Are you speaking to me?" she asked calmly. "I am afraid that you are making a mistake. I am quite sure that I do not know you."

SUFFERED AGONY WITH NEURALGIA

Nothing Helped Her Until She Tried "Fruit-a-tives"

CAMPBELLVILLE, ONT., May 5th, 1913.

"I cannot speak too highly of "Fruit-a-tives". For over thirty years, I have suffered from Chronic Neuralgia and Constipation, experiencing untold agony. I would not have my present health if it was not for "Fruit-a-tives" and I am glad of the opportunity of giving you this letter about such a splendid remedy as "Fruit-a-tives", for the guidance of other women who may be similarly affected"

Much Pain From Kidney Disease

Doctored in Vain Until Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Were Used.

Kidney derangements are often associated with disorders of the liver and bowels, and under these conditions ordinary kidney medicines usually fail to effect cure. It is because of their unique, combined action on the liver, kidneys and bowels that Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are so generally successful, even in the most complicated cases.

Mr. Emanuel Bernard, farmer, St. Paul's, Kent county, N.B., writes:—"About eighteen years ago my wife was bad with kidney disease, and suffered greatly from headaches, pains in bowels and stomach, and her heart was affected. For a year she was treated by her doctor, with no apparent benefit. She then used five boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with most satisfactory results. This gave us such a good opinion of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills that we always keep them in the house to be used for all derangements of the kidneys, liver and bowels." Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, 25c a box, 5 for $1.00, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

Debts and Debtors

If we give a merchant our custom, we have a right to expect him to advertise—to tell us weekly in the columns of THE BANNER what he has for us. Advertising is shop news, designed to inform us, save our time, and bring to our attention desirable merchandise.

Every retailer who is alive to the interests of his customers has a message—often many messages—for his customers concerning new goods, special offerings, and things that we ought to know about. Customers and non-customers will be attentive and responsive to these messages, if they are delivered every week in the form of advertisements in THE BANNER. The way to get more business is to ask for it.

A NOTE TO MERCHANTS

Would you buy much or regularly from firms that never solicit your trade? Do you not say—"The firm that wants my business must come after it?"

Yet some of you say, in effect to your customers—"We're here. If you want our goods come and get them, but don't expect us to go after you." It's a poor rule that doesn't work both ways.

LADIES' OUTFITTER

AFTER 21 YEARS

Shelburne Band Has Decided to Sever Its Connection With 36th Regiment.

Organization will be Continued as a Citizens' Band.

As the disorganizat on of the present 36th Regiment after the military camp at Niagara-on-the-Lake next month, and the formation of a city regiment, would place Shelburne Band out of bounds for continuing longer as a regimental band, and would make the purchase of new uniforms necessary, and camp for a band is nowadays both a troublesome and costly affair, the Citizens' Committee last week decided to resign from the military position at once and leave the officers of the regiment a free hand. The formal resignation was forwarded to Lt.-Col. R. C. Windeyer, of Toronto, commanding officer of the regiment, last Thursday.

The band is being reorganized at once as a Citizens' Band, with T. F. E. Clarridge, who has been in charge of the regimental band for over twelve years, as bandmaster. A new uniform equipment is being secured at a cost of between $350 and $400, which, of course, will "put a crimp" in the band finances for some time. The uniforms, however, were the only part of the band's equipment that belong to the regiment. When the cost of the uniforms is considered, it can readily be seen why the Citizens' Committee could not see their way clear to also meet the necessary financial obligations that would be incurred by the band going to camp.

The local band, then under the leadership of L. E. VanAmburgh, became the band of the 36th Regt. 21 years ago last January, the late Lt. Col. Richard Trywhitt, M.P., being then commanding officer of the regiment, and has held the position uninterruptedly since. Its record in the position is one the town need not be ashamed of.

As a bugle band and three companies (transferred from Grand Valley, Alliston and Malton) are to be taken to camp from West Toronto for the regimont for the coming camp, it is supposed a camp will be secured from the regimont's new territory also. If the officers have to buy a complete new set of instruments, music, etc., as well as guaranteeing the salary of a bandmaster at several times the salary the local band has been paying, they will perhaps come to the conclusion that they had been getting their music very cheaply in the past.

Messrs. W. J. Mandley, R. J. Puckering, J. A. Kannawin and T. F. E. Claridge are the members of the Citizens' Committee, with Mr. Mandley as President and Mr. Puckering as Treasurer.

The coats and trousers of the new uniforms will be made in town, Mr. Hugh Falconer having been given the contract, and the caps will come from Toronto.—Economist.

AN IMPORTANT MEETING.

Women's Missionary Societies Decide to Amalgamate.

At a meeting held in Knox Church, Shelburne, on Tuesday, May 19th, the Women's Foreign Missionary Society and the Women's Home Missionary Society of the Orangeville Presbytery decided to unite the two Societies into one, to be called "The Women's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church in Canada." Nearly 100 delegates were in attendance representing Societies in all parts of the Presbytery. The morning session was devoted to the hearing of reports and the winding up of the business of the two old Societies. The Societies met separately in the morning and held a union meeting in the afternoon. At the latter, which was presided over by Mrs. (Rev.) J. G. Cheyne, of Claude, the constitution of the new Society was considered clause by clause and unanimously adopted. The address of welcome was given by Mrs. J. W. Hamilton, Shelburne, and responded to by Miss Lamont, Orangeville. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—President, Mrs. Kendall, Dundalk; Vice-Presidents, Mrs. Bell, Laurel; Mrs. Black, Mono Centre; Mrs. Armstrong, Alton; Mrs. Scott, Hillsburg; Secretary, Mrs. Moodie, Dundalk; Supply Secretaries, Mrs. McArthur and Miss Lawson, Orangeville; Mission Band Secretary, Mrs. J. A. Mills, Shelburne; Scattered Helpers Secretary, Mrs. Wallace, Caledon East; Treasurer, Mrs. Hugh Ferguson, Shelburne; Auditors, Mrs. Mills and Miss McAlister. The invitation from the Grand Valley Auxiliary to meet there next May was accepted.

The Seven Laws of Friendship.

Edward Howard Griggs.

The seven laws of friendship are: 1. Moral sincerity. 2. Likeness of personality, that is, much overlapping of tastes. 3. Complimentary personality, sufficient unlikeness to give a zest and flavor to friendship. 4. Community of experience. What friends have lived through together is a bond that holds tight. 5. Growth. Friendship is not static. It must be wooed fresh every day. 6. Loyalty. Not only a faithful recognition of the bonds already established but also a sincerity and absence of pretence. There must needs be a succession of growing conradeships for every growing life. It is folly to blow the ashes of a dead fire and pretend to be warmed. 7. Independence of personality. To be worthy of a great friendship you must be able to do without it.

INCREASE OF INSANITY

Main Cause is the Deadly Drink Habit.

To the Editor:

For some years there has been a growing anxiety over the rapid increase of insanity. An American Government Commission reported that it is increasing almost three times as rapidly as the population. Asylums for the insane are becoming a great financial burden. They are all filled to overflowing and there is constant complaint of lack of room. People who think seriously of the subject begin to wonder how long it will be till the insane equal in number those of sound mind. The number of the insane is only a part of the evil for there is a very large number whose nervous systems are ruined who do not require asylum treatment. Thus we are fast becoming a nation of neurasthenics.

Finally Science turned her searchlight on the subject and demonstrated that not only is insanity really increasing more rapidly than the population, but that the main cause is the drinking habits of the people. This knowledge was slow in coming. People generally are unwilling to admit that drink was the cause of insanity in a member of their family. Many times when making out papers for admission to an asylum, I have been asked not to answer that question.

However a more hopeful outlook has arisen in several countries. Now that the cause is known in many countries they are trying to remove it. Great news comes from Kansas. During the last seven or eight years, prohibition has been well enforced, with the astonishing result that out of 105 counties, 87 have no insane, whereas Ontario has not a single county without a number of insane. The asylums of Kansas promise soon to be almost empty, as many of their jails and poorhouses are already entirely empty.

This is very encouraging and forever puts an end to the controversy regarding the principal cause of insanity. Renewed hope has arisen and a determination to lessen the evil as rapidly as possible. May this hope determine us to fight the drink evil till our asylums are empty or nearly so.

Loving thoughts shall always linger
In the grave where Mother's laid.

I often sit and think of her
When I am all alone
For memory is the only friend
That grief can call its own.

Like ivy on the withered oak
When other things decay
Our love for her will keep green
And never fade away.

Sleep on, dear Mother, and take thy rest
God calls Home first whom He loveth best.

SUMMER SKIN TROUBLES

are the commonest forms of summer skin troubles, and Zam-Buk ends these very quickly. It works in two ways. As soon as applied, its antiseptic powers get to work and kill all the poison in a wound, a sting or a sore. This generally ends the smarting and the pain. Then Zam-Buk begins the healing process, and fresh healthy tissue is built up. For sore, blistered feet, sore hands, heat rashes, baby's heat spots, sore places due to perspiration, etc., you can't equal Zam-Buk. It also cures cuts, ulcers, abscesses, piles, and all inflamed and diseased conditions of skin and subjacent tissue. Druggists and stores everywhere sell Zam-Buk, 50c. box. Use Zam-Buk Soap also, 25c. per tablet. All stores, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

EGOTISM.

Few of us have far to look for the fault of egotism. It may not show itself in boastful words—we may have too much taste for that; but what of the desire for praise, admiration, personal distinction which corrodes the service even of good men and women? Take care lest your very philanthropy and "work for God" is feeding your vanity and self-conceit. Sins of the spirit are as bad in the eyes of Christ as sins of the flesh. He never spoke a harsh word to the publican and sinner, but He lashed with scorn the "Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites." The sins which respectable people lightly commit every day of pride, indolence and indifference to the sufferings of the poor may be worse in His sight than the more flagrant ones of those not blessed with the same environment.—Selected.—Church Life.

Walking Round World.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hartley, a Montreal couple, who are walking around the world for a prize of $10,000, arrived in town yesterday afternoon and spent a few hours here before continuing their globe circling journey. The couple started out from Montreal on March 31st and must complete their 36,000 mile journey by March 31st, 1919. When they started on their journey each of them had a dollar in their pocket. The conditions of the competition are that they are not to beg, borrow or steal, but by exhibiting themselves and trying to please the public, accomplish the task they have undertaken. The exact distance to be covered is estimated at 36,187 miles and the pedestrians have to visit Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Ceylon, India, China, Manchuria, France, the British Isles and other countries. Mr. and Mrs. Hartley camp out using a tent in which to sleep. They carry a stock of postcards showing places of interest which they have visited. These they sell and in this way procure means to enable them to continue their travels.

SOLVING THE WIND

One Big Problem That Bothers the Weather Forecasters.

CURRENTS THEY CAN'T STUDY

Atmospheric Conditions Away Above the Earth Are Beyond Their Reach and Are Consequently Unknown Factors—Methods of the Ancients.

The art of predicting the weather is one in which it seems at first sight the modern scientist ought easily to surpass his ancestors. Yet it may be doubted whether he is really more successful in it than they were. The meteorological department boasted some time back that their forecasts of weather as published in the daily press were justified by the result in 52 per cent of the cases recorded. As the percentage of correct guesses in a sufficiently extended list, however, would exactly equal the incorrect, this does not show a very great superiority for scientific methods over pure conjecture.

Yet the meteorological department enjoys the advantage, as our ancestors, of course, did not, of elaborate and accurate recording instruments, like Secchi's meteorograph, together with telegraphic reports from weather stations dispersed nearly all over the surface of the globe. Its relative non-success shows perhaps that there is still a factor in the problem which it is at present impossible to estimate.

This is the more extraordinary because the modern method of forecasting the weather differs entirely from that practiced by the ancients. With them it was simply a question of time and season, or, what is the same thing, of the appearance or disappearance of certain stars.

When Hesiod's husbandman saw the Pleiades he knew it was time for him to begin his harvest, and when they set forty days later, his plowing. This might still be a good enough rule for countries near the equator, where the prevalence of trade winds, which blow uninterruptedly in the direction in which the sun appears to travel, and where the monsoons, which in the countries east of Suez blow for six months the other way, help to keep the weather, if not constant, yet regular.

In other latitudes, however, there is no such help, and he who would predict the weather must therefore confine himself to finding out what winds are blowing in other parts of the world and when they are likely to reach him.

As to this, modern science still depends mainly on the observations made by Halley, who discovered in the seventeenth century during a voyage in the tropics how the sun so warmed the air at the equator that the heated air, rising after its manner, dispersed itself toward the poles and was replaced by a rush of cold air from the regions farther from the sun.

This, which explains the phenomenon of trade winds, was really the foundation of modern meteorology, although it was reserved for Halley, some fifty years later, to point out that, thanks to the rotation of the earth on its own axis, both kinds of winds stray somewhat from their apparent objective.

Later Dove's "law of rotation" was discovered, which declares that in certain latitudes the wind will nearly always follow the sun's motion—i. e., will pass from N. through N. E., and from S. E. to S., completing the circle by passing from S. to N. through the west, but will very seldom move the reverse way.

Finally, there comes in what is known as the law of Buys Ballot, which is that, in the northern hemisphere, if one stands with one's back to the wind the line of lower pressure is always on one's left hand.

This enables us to understand what is meant by the cyclonic and anticyclonic disturbances which are so frequently mentioned in the official forecasts as approaching us, generally from the Atlantic.

If within any particular spot the pressure is lower than it is outside it, the wind blows round it in the contrary direction to the hands of a watch and is called cyclonic from the similar behavior of the West Indian hurricanes named cyclones. This is because the lowest pressure to any one standing with his back to the wind is always on one's left hand. If, however, the pressure within the area in question is higher than outside it, the wind blows round it clockwise and is called anti-cyclonic.

One circumstance against modern methods of forecasting the weather correctly outweighs all those in their favor. The winds that can be observed are all those blowing close to the earth's surface. What is the effect of the currents prevailing at even a few miles above it, where, as aviators constantly declare there are even "holes" and "pockets" in the atmosphere? Until there is more information on this, meteorology will not be an exact science.—Detroit Free Press

Wished He Hadn't Spoken.

The bored youth turned to his dinner partner, with a yawn.

"Who is that strange looking man over there who stares at me so much?" he drawled.

"Oh, that's Professor Jenkins," she replied airily, "the famous expert on insanity."—London Telegraph.

ONTARIO'S MUSEUM.

Dr. Orr and C. W. Nash Are Collectors of Wide Experience.

Thousands of Canadians have visited the big museums of the States and Great Britain and Europe. Very few, however, know much of the museum on Gould street, Toronto, although it's all their own.

The director is Dr. R. B. Orr. When Dr. Orr was in politics, he was known as the "black doctor." Not that his deeds were necessarily dark, but to distinguish him from his brother, Dr. J. O. Orr, the "red doctor." Dr. R. B. has not been interested in votes for some time, except in an abstract way. In fact, he has devoted more time to men without votes, Indians, long gone to the happy hunting grounds.

He was born near Kleinberg, York county, and has dug almost everywhere in the district. He isn't a navvy in the ordinary sense, but was an archaeologist at a very early age. Of late years, scientists of the old world have listened very earnestly to Dr. Orr's thrilling addresses on the noble red man and kindred subjects.

A valuable associate of the director is Mr. C. W. Nash, a naturalist of long standing. He was born in Sussex, England, but has been a Canadian for forty-five years. It is hinted that he knows more about the snakes and the birds and the animals of Ontario than any other mortal. He knows so much that, when he says a thing is so, nobody has the nerve to say that it isn't so—whatever the fact may be. In the language of the street, that's some reputation.

Mr. Nash has lectured in Ontario and elsewhere for twenty years on the whole wide field of biology as applied to practical farming.

He tells the farmer the true character of the meadow mouse, a pest, and pleads for the owl and the hawk. When the owl and the hawk pounces upon an unwary chicken, the Ontario farmer may feel inclined to question Mr. Nash's high opinion of the bird of prey, but Mr. Nash points ou. that the offender more than pays for his depredations in the her yard. Not only that, but the biologist differentiates between owls and owls, etc.

One variety may be less desirable than another. In short, Mr. Nash has gained the confidence of the agriculturist, and the naturalist's hobby is of practical value to the soil-tiller. Of course, his sphere of activity goes far beyond the meadow mouse problem, as he deals with such subjects as stock breeding, plant breeding, chemistry of the soil, etc. Why, he has discovered a devourer of the busy potato bug.

The Archaeological Department of the Museum is of long standing, dating back to the early days of the Canadian Institute and York Pioneers' Historical Society, and to the untiring efforts of the late Dr. David Boyle the people of Ontario are indebted for one of the largest Indian archaeological collections in the world. For years his life work was to place in the Ontario Provincial Museum, Toronto, a collection of Indian antiques so that the future generations in the province would have some knowledge of the manners and customs which prevailed in olden times. The dress of the Indians is illustrated by models which Dr. Orr is increasing, and there are stone implements, axes, adzes, gouges, spades, and various ornaments.

"When you consider that we have over thirty thousand specimens of their handiwork," says the director, "you can readily understand what an educational storehouse it is for those interested in this work."

"Hart's River" Not a Defeat.

After years of controversy the name "Hart's River" has been added to the list of South African War fights on the monument on University avenue. The committee in charge of the monument inscription had refused to put it on because, though the Canadians took part in the fight on March 31, 1902, it was considered a defeat, and defeats are not usually recorded on British monuments.

Rev. F. Allan Patterson, M.A., who was a member of the 2nd Canadian Mounted Rifles, had tried to convince the committee that the fight did not end in a defeat to the British, and he at last succeeded.

By way of proof he wrote to Field Marshal Lord Kitchener, and received a reply which enclosed Kitchener's despatch reporting the engagement to the War Office, and in which he definitely says he repulsed the Boer forces.

The committee agreed to put the name on the monument.

Cost of Strikes.

A special report has been issued by the Department of Labor containing particulars concerning strikes and lockouts that occurred in Canada during the period 1901-1912. The report shows that strikes taking place during those twelve years have numbered 1,319, an average of 110 annually. There were 319,880 employes concerned.

The time losses in strikes during the twelve years reach nearly nine million working days and would represent, it is suggested, at $2.50 a day, an annual loss to the workers of about $1,900,000, or a total estimated loss for the twelve years of between twenty-two and twenty-three million dollars.

Found Honey Mine.

Martin Rucker, former C. P. R. agent at Tilbury, Ont., and now located at Jeanette Station, in Tilbury East, discovered a honey mine on his Tilbury East home. Noticing bees flying around the corner of the house on warm days, he started to investigate, and found between the ceiling of the first floor and the flooring of the second storey of the house a bees' nest that contained 1,000 pounds of honey.

A JUNE WEDDING

A Large Gathering of Friends at Jackson-Harshaw Nuptials Yesterday.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Harshaw, First St., was the scene of a very pretty wedding yesterday afternoon, when their eldest daughter, Frances Beatrice, was united in marriage to Mr. Robert Edgar Jackson, son of the late William Jackson, of Cardwell. The ceremony, which took place at 2.30 o'clock, was witnessed by a large gathering of relatives, the guests including a number of out-of-town friends. Rev. W. M. Morris, pastor of St. Andrew's Church, was the officiating clergymen. The marriage service took place in the drawing room under a tastefully decorated arch of white drapery. The bride, who was given away by her father, was gowned in silk crepe de chine with an overdress of shadow lace bordered with seed pearls, wore the conventional bridal veil and orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of white roses and lillies of the valley. Her bridesmaid, Miss Marie Jackson, a sister of the groom, was dressed in pink charmeuse silk with overdress of shadow lace and rosebuds and carried pink roses. Mr. Norman Harshaw, of Toronto, brother of the bride, was the best man. Prior to the ceremony the wedding march from Lohengrin was played by Miss Henrietta Wallace, A.T.C.M., organist of Victoria Church, West Toronto. At the close Miss Georgina Harshaw, of West Toronto, a cousin of the bride sang "All Mine Alone" with exquisite feeling and expression. A dainty wedding breakfast was afterwards served in the dining room, which was artistically decorated with white drapery and smilax. The flowers on the tables were pink and white carnations and smilax. The effect was heightened by the use of artificial light, the blinds being drawn and the room brilliantly illuminated with tungsten lamps. The health of the bride was proposed by Rev. Mr. Morris and felicitous addresses of a happy character were made by several of the guests. The bride received a large number of beautiful wedding gifts, evidencing the high esteem in which she is held by her many friends. Among these was a purse of gold from the congregation of St. Andrew's Church and a beautiful mahogany music cabinet from St. Andrew's choir, of which she has been a member for several years. The groom's presents were a pendant of whole pearls and aqua marines to the bride, a cameo and pearl necklace to the bridesmaid, a pair of monogram cuff links to the groomsman, a silver mesh bag to the soloist and a bar pin with knot of pearls to the pianiste. The happy couple left on the evening train on a honeymoon trip to New York, Boston and other eastern cities. On their return they will take up their residence on First St. They took their departure amid showers of confetti and good wishes from the numerous friends, who had assembled at the depot to see them off on their journey. The bride wore a becoming travelling costume of payon blue with hat to match. The Banner joins with Mr. and Mrs. Jackson's many friends in extending hearty congratulations and good wishes.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mrs. (Dr.) A. H. Perfect and son, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. and Miss Georgina Harshaw, Mrs. W. Maher and daughter, and Mrs. D. J. Carson, of West Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Harshaw and family, Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Hunter, Miss Gertrude and Mr. Geo. Morley, Miss Ina and Mr. Geo. Jackson and Mr. and Mrs. W. McKinney, of Toronto, Mrs. Mason and daughter, of Agincourt; Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Corbett, of Calgary; Mrs. Robt. Galbraith and daughter, Ellesmere, Ont.; Mr. and Mrs. V. A. Perfect, Teeswater; Mr. and Mrs. John Maharg, Moose Jaw and Mr. Chas. Harshaw, Cranbrook, B.C.

CADET INSPECTION.

High and Public School Corps Reviewed by Major Marshall.

The annual inspection and review of the High and Public School Cadet Corps took place on the High School grounds on Thursday afternoon. The inspection was made the occasion of a half-holiday for both schools and pupils and teachers showed their interest in military exercises by attending in large numbers. The campus presented a brilliant spectacle while the inspection was in progress. About sixty of the boys from the High School and an equal number from the Public School turned out in their smart khaki uniforms and were put through the various movements in squad, section and company drill and skirmishing work by their officers and Major Marshall, of Toronto, the inspecting officer of Cadet Corps for the second division. The inspection, which occupied fully two hours, was witnessed by a large concourse of citizens and pupils, the majority of the teachers and a number of the members of the two Trustee Boards. The fine bugle band of the High School Corps added life and interest to the inspection and contributed materially to the precision with which the youthful soldiery executed the various movements and manoeuvres.

At the conclusion of the exercises Major Marshall addressed the Cadets, expressing his pleasure at their military bearing and conduct throughout the inspection and urging them all to attend camp this year, where he hoped they would again win the prize. The inspecting officer also expressed himself as being especially pleased with the work of the officers. At the conclusion of Major Marshall's address he was given three rousing cheers, as were Principal Steele and Instructors Evans and Firth. The latter were pronounced particularly competent by the Inspector. Headed by their fine band, the two Cadet Corps afterwards marched through the principal streets of the town.

The following are the officers of the two Corps:—

D. D. D. In Hospitals; Standard Skin Cure

How many hospital patients, suffering the frightful itch, the raw scorching pain of skin disease, have been soothed to sleep by a soothing fluid washed in by the nurse's hands?

That fluid is the famous D. D. D. prescription for eczema.

THE SUPERVISING NURSE of one of our prominent Catholic institutions (name of nurse and institute on application), writes regarding a patient. "The disease had eaten her eyebrows away. Her nose and lips had become disfigured. Since the use of D.D.D. her eyebrows are growing, her nose and face have assumed their natural expression."

How many eczema sufferers are paying their doctors for regular treatment and are being treated with this same soothing, healing fluid?

DR. GEO. T. RICHARDSON frankly writes "D. D. D. is superior to anything I have ever found. Soft and soothing, yet a powerful agent."

To do the work, D. D. D. Prescriptions must be applied according to directions given in the pamphlet around every bottle. Follow these directions—and see!

And it certainly takes away the itch at once—the moment the liquid is applied. The skin is soothed—calmed—so thoroughly refreshed—delightfully cooled.

All druggists of standing have the famous specific as well as the efficient D. D. D. Skin Soap.

But we are so confident of the merits of this prescription that we will refund the purchase price of the first full size bottle if it fails to reach your case. You alone are to judge.

HONEY BEES INCREASE FRUIT CROP.

Pollenization of Blossoms must be Properly Effected to Ensure Good Yield.

Many remarkable facts have been noticed by fruit inspectors, while on their regular tours of inspection, regarding the importance of bees in orchards in spring during the apple blossoming period. In the county of Middlesex there were comparatively few apples one season. Practically the only exception was an orchard of 12 to 14 acres, the proprietor of which was also an extensive beekeeper. The explanation given was that, as the bees were kept in the orchard, they were able during even the short periods of sunshine, to fertilize the blossoms fairly well.

Bee-keeping is a paying and profitable occupation; one that should receive much more attention than is given to this very important industry. Fruit blossoms of nearly all kinds depend almost exclusively upon insects for their pollenization. The wild bees include about 50 per cent. of the insects useful to the fruit grower for this purpose, but in large plantations, such as orchards, plantations of strawberries or bush fruits, etc., the large number of blossoms coming in at the same time overtax the usual number of wild bees in the neighborhood so that it is advisable to have a special stock of honey bees to supplement them. More than this, tame bees being kept in the immediate neighborhood, or directly in the fruit plantations, are more useful than the wild bees which may in many cases have to fly long distances, and cannot reach the orchards during the mild spells between showers.—J. F.

UNION JACK ON SMOKESTACK.

Ben. Benton, a young fellow employed in the cement works, thought to show the loyalty of the company scaled the ladder of the smoke stack on Victoria Day, and on Friday last and placed a Union Jack on the top of it. The height, we are told, is about 200 feet, 185 feet of steel and about 20 feet of concrete base. The ladder on which Benton climbed runs perpendicularly up the stack about eight inches from it, and few people would care to undertake the task of climbing it. The flag floated proudly to the breeze for a few hours, but was soon burned by the intense heat. During the few preceding days Benton had been up and down five times, and apart from the fatigue of the long climb, thinks nothing of it. We have no desire to gain notoriety by going up after the flag-pole.—Durham Chronicle.

TOOK THREE GIFTS

A Request That Surprised the Sultan Abdul Hamid.

TALE OF A BADLY USED TURK.

A Truthful Account of an Experience at the Court of the "Illuminator of the Universe" That Reads Like a Story From the Arabian Nights.

Many fantastic stories are related of Abdul Hamid, the ex-sultan of Turkey, and his court. The following, however, came to me from a reliable source, writes a contributor to Chambers' Journal, and once when I told the story in company one of my listeners told me that he personally knew it to be true. It is worthy of a place among Scheherazade's famous tales.

Not far from the sultan's palace lived a certain Ahmed Rushdi Effendi, one of the hundreds of clerks employed at the sublime porte. Ahmed's duties consisted of writing ornate official communications to provincial governors. For this he was supposed to receive a salary of 200 piasters (about $8) per month. If, however, he received this salary six times a year he thought himself lucky.

Compared to many of his colleagues in the government offices, Ahmed was in comfortable circumstances. He owned his own house, so he had no rent to pay, and he gave his leisure time to cultivating the tiny garden that supplied his family with fruit and vegetables the whole year round. Ahmed Effendi, not being ambitious, was a contented man.

In his peaceful household there was only one discordant note. The cause was a dwarf peach tree in Ahmed's garden that bore every year six or eight mammoth peaches. Early in his married life his wife dreamed that her husband would one day attain eminence and that the peaches were connected with his fortune.

Fifty times each year she urged him to take the peaches as an offering to the sultan. "We are simple people," she would say. "Such magnificent peaches are not for us. Carry them, I pray thee, to the palace and present them to the benefactor of the world." But Ahmed would reply:

"Wife, no good comes to those who have relations with the palace. I, who have always been discreet, do not wish to fall under suspicion."

But at last, after twenty years, Ahmed yielded to his wife's importunity and carried the beautiful fruit to the palace. There he entrusted the peaches to the grand chamberlain, who, knowing the sultan's fondness for fruit, promptly carried them into the presence of the Illuminator of the Universe. The sultan graciously accepted the gift and commanded Ahmed to wait until he was at liberty in order that he might himself thank the grower of such splendid fruit.

It happened that the reception room where the scribe awaited the pleasure of the sovereign was filled with a band of suspected bomb throwers, and Ahmed was presently hustled away to prison with the supposed revolutionaries. He was thoroughly confused by the rough treatment of the guards and could only stammer: "I am the man who brought the peaches! I am the man who brought the peaches!"

In prison he soon became known as "the man of the peaches" and was looked upon as a harmless lunatic. After many months the suspected bomb throwers, including Ahmed, were brought before the criminal court. He told his story to the judge and asked that the grand chamberlain be called to confirm his words. The judge granted his request and was greatly surprised when the dignitary told of the arrival of Ahmed at the palace some months ago and of his mysterious disappearance. The chamberlain took the afflicted scribe to his own suit in the palace and went to explain matters to the sultan.

The sultan, sincerely sorry for the unlucky mistake, commanded the chamberlain to promise Ahmed that any wish of his should be fulfilled. Ahmed replied that he would accept not one, but three gifts, and that he must name them to the sultan personally. The sultan was much concerned and ordered the scribe ushered into his private study.

"Sire," said Ahmed, "I ask for a hatchet, the sum of 200 piasters and a copy of the Koran."

"Your desire is granted," answered the sultan, "on condition that you explain the meaning of your singular request."

"Sire," replied our hero, "with the 200 piasters I shall obtain a divorce from my wife, the original cause of all my trouble; with the hatchet I intend to cut down my peach tree, and upon the Koran I wish to swear an oath never to enter the palace gates again so long as I live."

Apelles' Masterpiece.

The masterpiece of Apelles was the Venus Anadyomene, "Venus Rising From the Sea." The falling drops of water from her hair form a transparent silver veil over her form. It cost $121,500 and was painted for the temple of Esculapius at Cos, and afterward placed by Augustus in the temple which he dedicated to his illustrious patron, Julius Caesar. Part of the famous picture was injured and no one could be found to repair it.—New York American.

A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

16 Year Owen Sound Boy Fall from 50 Foot Cliff.

Master Eric Pallister, the sixteen-year-old son of Mr. G. C. Pallister, manager of Ryan Bros.' store, was the victim of a serious and almost fatal accident on Saturday afternoon when he fell from the top of the rock on the east hill to the ground below, a distance of about fifty feet. That the boy escaped being instantly killed is little short of a miracle, as he took a clear drop with nothing to break his fall and lighted on the rocks and stones beneath. The boy was one of a pic-nic party which had spent the afternoon on the east hill rocks and they were just preparing to return home about seven o'clock. Young Pallister, who is noted among his chums as a somewhat venturesome spirit, was climbing a tree just on the edge of the cliff near the old lime kiln on the Garafraxa road, when his foot caught in the bark, throwing him off his balance. He grabbed an another limb but it was not strong enough to sustain his weight and gave way, and the boy, to the horror of his companions, took the fifty foot drop to the bottom. Had he fallen on his head, in all probability he would have been killed instantly, but fortunately he landed on his side on the sharp rocks. His companions, as soon as they realized what had happened, rushed down the side of the cliff, doubtless expecting to find the lad dead. His brother, Ernie, and Gaden Daniels were the first to reach him and they immediately picked him up and began to carry him towards town. In the meantime, Melville Hershey, who was also one of the party, ran to the nearest telephone and summoned his father, Dr. Hershey, who hastened at once to the scene of the accident. The boy's companions had carried him about half a mile and were opposite Mr. Miller's place when the doctor arrived. As soon as the latter saw the condition the boy was in, he sent for the ambulance and had him taken at once to the hospital. Here Dr. Hershey and Dr. Howey dressed the lad's injuries and made him as comfortable as possible. It was found his hip bone was broken in several places, he had sustained two puncture wounds in his side, his wrist was out of joint, while one eye was badly bruised and blackened. Besides this, he was badly shaken up and had sustained several other cuts and abrasions. On Saturday night, the doctors performed an operation and took part of the broken bone away. At present he is resting well and the doctors have every confidence for his recovery.—Owen Sound Times.

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON.

The blood must be filtered, otherwise you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

Most headache powders and pain killers are very hard on the heart but Kephaldol, although it takes away the pain surely and quickly, is absolutely harmless. For this reason Kephaldol is heartily endorsed by the medical profession in all countries.

Since Dr. Stohr, the great Austrian nerve specialist, first used Kephaldol it has steadily increased in favor—to-day it is conceded to be the one best cure for all nerve pains. A large tube will be sent direct by the manufacturers upon receipt of 50c. Kephaldol Limited, 31 Latour Street, Montreal.

A NEW INDUSTRY.

The introduction of Karakul sheep into Prince Edward Island marks the beginning of an industry in Canada that may mean much for the future prosperity of the country. Evidently those behind the movement are not keeping a good thing to themselves. They appear quite willing to take the initiative in the way of experiment in order to find out the type best suited to yield the best kind of Persian lamb fur. They have already accomplished much in this direction, and by a continuation of the work will no doubt establish certain basic truths regarding the industry that will make it a safe business for the farmer or groups of farmers in any part of Canada to engage in. The average farmer is more interested in sheep farming than fox farming, an industry that has already reached large proportions on the Island. There seems to be nothing in the rearing and handling of Karakul sheep that any sheep farmer cannot undertake with reasonable assurance of success. The main thing is to get the combination in breeding that will give the highest type of Persian lamb fur in the young lamb. Karakuls are hardy and well adapted to this climate, and seem to require no greater care than other sheep, two qualities that make them adaptable to conditions found on the average Canadian farm. Little has been said about the quality of the wool on the mature animal. One would infer that it would be coarse, judging from the fact that crossing with fine wool sheep produces inferior fur.

Save the Children.

Mothers who keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house may feel that the lives of their little ones are reasonably safe during the hot weather. Stomach troubles, cholera infantum and diarrhoea carry off thousands of little ones every summer, in most cases because the mother does not have a safe medicine at hand to give promptly. Baby's Own Tablets cure these troubles, or if given occasionally to the well child will prevent their coming on. The Tablets are guaranteed by a government analyst to be absolutely harmless even to the new-born babe. They are especially good in the summer because they regulate the bowels and keep the stomach sweet and pure. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Renewed Vigor in Old Age

This Letter Brings a Message of Cheer to the Aged—Results of Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

New, rich blood is what is most needed in the declining years to keep up energy and vitality. That Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a wonderful help in maintaining good health and prolonging life is attested by the writer of this letter.

Mr. Stephen J. Leard, North Tryon, P.E.I., writes :—"At seventy-five years of age my heart gave out and became very irregular and weak in action and would palpitate. My nerves also became weak, and I could do nothing but lie in bed in a languishing condition, losing strength and weight. In that condition I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and am cured. Had I not obtained this treatment I would now be in the box with the roof over my nose. At eighty-one I have an energy which means go, and I am writing this letter so that old people like myself may prolong their health and strength by using this great medicine." 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. EVEN AS YOU AND I

(With Apology to Kipling)

A fool there was and he made his lair (Even as you and I)
On a bag of feathers and bunch of hair (If he only knew what else was there)
But the fool to the subject gave no care (Even as you and I)

Oh the sleep he lost and the rest he lost
Yet wondered his health was poor
Tho' a third of his life was spent in bed
It never had entered his foolish head
To think of Ostermoor.

A fool there was and his nights he spent (Even as you and I)
On a mattress that looked so innocent
But he always arose in any event
Tired, unrested and discontent (Even as you and I)

And it isn't the shame and it isn't the blame
That burns the heart to the core
It's the coming to know the comfort we lost
Seeing at what a trifling cost
We could get an Ostermoor!

Save the Children.

Mothers who keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house may feel that the lives of their little ones are reasonably safe during the hot weather. Stomach troubles, cholera infantum and diarrhoea carry off thousands of little ones every summer, in most cases because the mother does not have a safe medicine at hand to give promptly. Baby's Own Tablets cure these troubles, or if given occasionally to the well child will prevent their coming on. The Tablets are guaranteed by a government analyst to be absolutely harmless even to the new-born babe. They are especially good in the summer because they regulate the bowels and keep the stomach sweet and pure. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Renewed Vigor in Old Age

This Letter Brings a Message of Cheer to the Aged—Results of Using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

New, rich blood is what is most needed in the declining years to keep up energy and vitality. That Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a wonderful help in maintaining good health and prolonging life is attested by the writer of this letter.

Mr. Stephen J. Leard, North Tryon, P.E.I., writes :—"At seventy-five years of age my heart gave out and became very irregular and weak in action and would palpitate. My nerves also became weak, and I could do nothing but lie in bed in a languishing condition, losing strength and weight. In that condition I began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and am cured. Had I not obtained this treatment I would now be in the box with the roof over my nose. At eighty-one I have an energy which means go, and I am writing this letter so that old people like myself may prolong their health and strength by using this great medicine." 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. EVEN AS YOU AND I

(With Apology to Kipling)

A fool there was and he made his lair (Even as you and I)
On a bag of feathers and bunch of hair (If he only knew what else was there)
But the fool to the subject gave no care
(Even as you and I)

Oh the sleep he lost and the rest he lost
Yet wondered his health was poor
Tho' a third of his life was spent in bed
It never had entered his foolish head
To think of Ostermoor.

A fool there was and his nights he spent
(Even as you and I)
On a mattress that looked so innocent
But he always arose in any event
Tired, unrested and discontent
(Even as you and I)

And it isn't the shame and it isn't the blame
That burns the heart to the core
It's the coming to know the comfort we lost
Seeing at what a trifling cost
We could get an Ostermoor!

THE BANNER

THE BANNER, JUNE 11th, 1914.

BEST AND McKEOWN.

Member in Federal House Had No Opposition at Conservative Convention on Friday.

McKeown Captured Provincial Nomination on First Ballot—Late Member Received Votes of 141 of the 212 Delegates.

Two hundred and fifteen delegates were entitled to vote in the Conservative Convention held in Shelburne on Friday afternoon for the purpose of nominating candidates for the House of Commons and the Ontario Legislature. 212 of them were present and voted on the one ballot that was taken to select the Provincial candidate. The only polling subdivision in Dufferin that was not fully represented was Shrigley in the north end of Melancthon. The Convention drew the usual large crowd, the auditorium being filled to the doors by the time the speaking began. The audience was orderly and gave the speakers an attentive hearing.

Two candidates, Mr. John Best, the sitting member and Dr. Campbell, of Orangeville, were nominated for the House of Commons. The latter withdrew, making Mr. Best the unanimous choice of the Convention. There were seven nominations for the Legislature, five of the nominees—Messrs. C. R. McKeown, John A. Cornelius, John Best, S. C. McKee and John S. Spence—allowed their names to go before the Convention. Mr. McKeown won out on the first ballot. The vote was :—

McKeown	141
Cornelius	36
Bryan	29
McKee	4
Spence	2

It was 10 minutes to 2 o'clock when President Cornelius stepped to the front of the platform to call the Convention to order. It was a privilege, said Mr. Cornelius, to have the honor of presiding over a gathering of the Conservative party of Dufferin called for the purpose of selecting candidates for the Federal and Provincial Houses. He trusted the Convention would be a harmonious one and that the delegates would give the selection of the Candidates their careful consideration. If they did this he was sanguine that their choice would be conducive to the good of the party, the county and the country.

After his introductory address, Mr. Cornelius named Messrs. J. C. Reid, Robert Gallaugher and R. L. Mortimer a Committee on Credentials and then announced that he was prepared to receive nominations. Ten minutes was allowed for this purpose and nominations were received for both Houses, the only conditions imposed being that they must be made in writing and that the mover and seconder must be regularly accredited delegates. When the time elapsed the following nominations were announced :—

COMMONS

John Best, by John Clokey and W. J. Jelly.

Dr. G. H. Campbell, by John A. Simpson and Jos. Gillespie.

LEGISLATURE.

John S. Spence, by W. T. Leader and E. Hamilton.

Dr. T. A. Carson, by W. A. Donaldson and Arch. Greer.

W. A. Wansbrough, by W. J. Jeffers and W. J. Jelly.

Jno. A. Cornelius, by Robt. Simpson and J. K. Thompson.

John Bryan by T. H. Hamilton and S. J. Brown.

C. R. McKeown, by Dr. G. H. Campbell and Jos. Gillespie.

S. C. McKee, by Wm. Kirkland and Geo. Hand.

At this stage President Cornelius vacated the chair in favor of Mr. Harry White, of Shelburne, who proved a capable presiding officer. There was considerable difference of opinion as to the length of time the candidates should be allowed to speak. Eventually the Convention decided to give Messrs. Best and McKeown twenty minutes apiece and the other nominees ten minutes each.

John Best M.P., who was the first speaker called, told the Convention that he was glad to see such a large gathering. He was glad that the Tories of Dufferin still realized that they belonged to the best party in Canadian politics. R. L. Borden he characterized as the best Premier Canada has ever had. He thanked his audience for the support he had received at the last election and claimed that he had brought back the Tory banner untarnished. Mr. Best reminded the Convention that while he had always done his best to serve the interests of the people of Dufferin he had not been sent to Ottawa to legislate for one County but for the Dominion at large. When the Borden Government came into power it found itself with several legacies on its hands. Among these were the Grand Trunk Pacific, Canadian Northern and the Farmers' Bank. It had to take up and continue as best it could a great deal of the work that the Laurier government had not finished. One of the things the Borden Government had tried consistently to do was to fulfil the promises made while in opposition. It had given the people of the West terminal elevators and had assisted develop the agricultural industry. In proof of the latter statement Mr. Best instanced the increase in the expenditure for agricultural purposes. Under the Laurier regime this amounted to only $1,000,000 a year. Now the annual expenditure was $4,000,000. Reference was also made to the Bill for Highway Improvement which was afterwards killed in the Senate. There was nothing that the country needed more than improved roads. On the subject of the C.N.R., Mr. Best stated that there was not a Conservative member in the House who would claim that the arrangement was ideal. It was the best that could be made and after two months of careful investigation the Government concluded it was better to guarantee the Company's bonds for $45,000,000 than to lose the $60,000,000 already invested. All the subsidiary companies were now under the control of one holding company and the country held 40 per cent. of the stock of this Company. Even if the country were obliged to take over the C. N. R. system it would only cost the people one half as much as the Grand Trunk Pacific. Mr. Best reviewed the Farmers' Bank case at considerable length and justified the Government's bill to aid the unfortunate depositors by showing that there had never been a bank failure in Canada under similar circumstances. The Bank, the member argued, had its very origin in fraud and deception. On the subject of rural mail delivery, Mr. Best made the statement that there was not another county in the Dominion that has as large a mileage of rural mail routes in proportion to its size as Dufferin. There was now upwards of $18,000 a year coming into the County by reason of rural mail delivery and when the system was fully completed there would be nearly $25,000 per annum. On the whole the system was working out to the satisfaction of the people, although there was some dissatisfaction in two or three instances. Mr. Best referred to the new post office in Shelburne, the item of $9000 placed in the supplementary estimates for an addition to the Orangeville post-office and expressed the hope that Grand Valley would get a post office building in the near future. Since he was elected he had devoted his time and energies to the welfare of his constituents and had done everything he possibly could to assist the County. If he received the nomination and was spared to see an election and had the good fortune to be returned to represent the constituency he would continue to do the best he could to serve the interests of the people. Mr Best closed with an appeal for support in the Convention and at the next election.

John Best, M. P.

O. R. McKeown, K. C.

Mr. C. R. McKeown, who followed Mr. Best, devoted his remarks almost altogether to Provincial questions. Seven years ago, he said, by reason of the death of Dr. Lewis the standard of the Conservative party had been placed in his hands. The passing of the years had again brought the representative men of the party together to select a candidate and he was before the Convention asking for a continuance of the confidence he had enjoyed for the last seven years. Mr. McKeown likened the Convention to a caucus of the Conservative members in the House. There might be differences of opinion in the Convention, but after the delegates left the Convention hall they should stand united behind the candidates whom they had selected. For seven years he had represented the County and had loyally supported Sir James Whitney, the grandest Premier who had ever filled that position in Ontario. Referring to the recent illness of the Premier, Mr. McKeown stated that in Divine Providence Sir James had made a recovery that had surprised the medical profession. The late representative for Dufferin claimed that he had been attentive in the discharge of his duties—so attentive that he had lost only two days each in the last and preceding sessions of the Legislature. Sir James Whitney had recognized this attentiveness to the business of the House by calling him across the Chamber and notifying him that he had been given the responsible position of assistant Government whip. Since that time he had been further honored by his party with the position of chief Government whip. Mr. McKeown took some credit for the fact that not a bit of legislation had gone on the statute book without receiving his consideration. If it came before a committee of which he happened to be a member he was in his place when the committee met. He was responsible for an amendment to the Insurance Act, which he succeeded in getting through the House despite the active and united opposition of the Insurance Companies. He was before the Convention seeking nomination as a supporter of the Whitney Administration, which had placed more good laws on the statute books of Ontario than had any preceding Administration.

Under the Ross Government in 1904 the revenue of the province was only slightly over $4,000,000. In 9 years of Conservative rule it had increased to $11,188,000. The increased revenue had come without taxing the people and was obtained by doubling the taxes on railways, increasing the taxes from mines, banks and insurance companies. The increased revenue put the Government in a position to spend more money on road improvement. At present the Government had under contemplation an annual expenditure of $2,000,000, or a total expenditure of $30,000,000 on the highways of old Ontario during the next fifteen years. Automobolists would be required to contribute more money to the maintenance of the roads. At present they paid $4 a year for a license. This would be changed to 50c per horse power, which meant that the man who drove a 30 h.p. car would be required to pay $15 a year for his license. This would mean a revenue of $300,000 or $400,000 a year from auto licenses. Mr. McKeown referred to the extension of the benefits and work of the Ontario Agricultural College by the establishment of district offices and the appointment of District Representatives of the Department of Agriculture. The municipalities of Dufferin had already received nearly $7000 from the increased taxation of railways. The speaker also spoke of Hon. W. J. Hanna's prison farm scheme and its success as an illustration of the fact that the Whitney Government was not afraid to tackle big problems. $1,000,000 more annually had been set apart for education and had been used in part to raise the standard of teachers' salaries. The fact that these supplementary grants had fallen 28 per cent. short of the amount required was due to the general response to the Government's attempt to increase the salaries and improve the efficiency of the public schools. Touching upon the bi-lingual question, Mr. McKeown remarked humorously that the educational horse had a bi-lingual spavin and that the Government proposed to remove the spavin and not kill the horse either. This it proposed to accomplish by doing away with the teaching of French in the schools. Mr. McKeown also dealt at some length with the question of advanced temperance legislation, making the claim that the Whitney Administration had done more than any preceding Government along these lines. He illustrated his argument by referring to the refusal to grant licenses in Brampton where the local option by-law was quashed on a technicality and to the Government's action in enforcing the Canada Temperance Act, notwithstanding the fact that it is a Federal enactment.

Dr. Campbell admitted that his nomination for the Federal House was an entirely unexpected honor. He supposed many of the delegates did not know who he was and most of them didn't care a "whoop." To enlighten his audience on this point the Dr. proceeded to state that he had been preceded by three generations of Campbells in Dufferin County all of whom were Tories and was himself busily engaged rearing a fifth generation, whose members he hoped would also be Tories. It was up to Mr. Best to camp on the trail of the Government and to get Dufferin as many good things as possible. Dr. Campbell advocated armouries, not because they were drill halls but practically Y.M.C.A's and therefore an instrument for the moral uplift of the young men of the country. He referred to Col. Sam Hughes as a great temperance worker, and praised him for abolishing the canteen and defied any man to point out any Government that had done more for temperance reform than the present Whitney Government. Before resuming his seat the Dr. gracefully retired in favor of Mr. Best.

Jno. S. Spence complimented the Chairman on his tact and ability and expressed his pleasure at the large attendance which he said showed the keen interest the people were taking in political affairs. He was surprised at his nomination as he had not expected it and was not prepared with a speech. He was in accord with the Whitney government in every respect with the exception of the 3-5ths clause. Even on this point he was not so strongly opposed as he had been. The Liquor License law had never been properly enforced until the present Government came into power. If the other nominees were going to stand the Convention he would stay too and would be grateful for the support of any delegates who might think well of his candidature.

Dr. Carson intimated from his seat in the hall that he was not a candidate and would not occupy the time of the Convention by making a speech.

W. A. Wansbrough was pleased to be present at what he described as a genuine good old-time Tory rally. He was a little amused over the position Mr. Spence had taken on the three-fifths clause. For his part, he had always been in accord with the three-fifths requirement. There were lots of people in Grand Valley who were opposed to the three-fifths clause a year ago, and who thought it a mighty good thing to-day. He was in accord with the policy of the Borden government and also that of the Whitney government and was prepared to support the men whom the Convention selected as its candidates. Mr. Wansbrough announced that he was not a candidate.

John A. Cornelius intimated that he had only a few words to offer the Convention. He would like to remind the delegates that he had spent several years as a municipal representative and had seen much of public service. Even with this experience he had hesitated to take the decisive step that might mean the entrance into the broader field of politics and general service. Mr Cornelius appealed to the Convention for support as a son of the soil, who had always been associated with agricultural interests and who felt that there were problems relating to the betterment of agricultural conditions that must be dealt with and solved. He was thankful for the support he had received in the past and it was for the Convention to say whether the public experience which had been a pleasure to him and, he trusted, no dishonor to the County of Dufferin, was to become fuller and richer in the broader field of general politics.

John Cornelius, President Conservative Association.

John Bryan announced that he was before the Convention as a candidate for the Legislature and then proceeded to contradict a report that if he did not carry the Convention he would run anyway. He had never made a statement that he would run and was prepared to abide by the decision of the Convention. The farmers were a great majority of the people of Ontario and he believed farmer representatives would understand their needs better than lawyers or doctors. He was a temperance man and strongly in favor of progressive temperance legislation. He was in favor of the three-fifths clause and also heartily in accord with the Government's policy regarding bi-lingual schools. Before taking his seat Mr. Bryan made a brief reference to his long municipal experience including five years' service in the County Council.

S. C. McKee thought the Convention was a good place for dissentients to come in order to get converted. No Government in the history of Ontario had been so judicious as the Whitney government. Mr. McKee discussed the naming and hydro-electric policy of the present Administration, eulogized the prison farm scheme, extolled the Succession Duties Act and was elaborating on hydro-radial railways when his time expired.

A slight hitch occurred when the Chairman pledged the Convention to support the successful candidate shortly before the ballot was taken. When a standing vote was called for some of the delegates declined to rise to their feet. After some urging all stood up except two men, who remained sitting. There were excited cries of "name them," "put them out" and "don't let them vote," but the Chairman showed his good sense by dropping the matter and proceeding with the ballot.

Ex-Warden John Bryan.

R. A. Riky, Shelburne, Dr. Berwick, Grand Valley, and Robt. Gallaugher, Mulmur, were appointed scrutineers. The announcement of the result of the voting was greeted with hand-clapping and some cheers. The applause was renewed when Mr. Best and afterwards Mr. McKeown were called on to speak to the Convention. Both candidates gave brief, vigorous addresses, thanking the delegates for their nomination and making a plea for united support in the event of opposition developing. Mr. McKeown told the Convention that he would be more than human or less than mortal if he did not appreciate getting the nomination on the first ballot.

The Convention closed with rousing cheers for the King, Premiers Borden and Whitney, the two Candidates and the Chairman.

LAUREL.

The rain on Sunday was much needed here and has greatly improved the appearance of the crops.

Our town is now humming with the sound of automobiles. The owners are Mr. G. Hepton, Mr. H. Hughes and Mr. C. Braiden.

Wedding bells will soon be ringing in our midst.

Our poets, Bumble Bee, Tame Bee, Wild Bee, Would Bee etc. are very quiet now, but we presume they are busy making honey for their winter store.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Maharg from the United States are visiting friends in this vicinity.

Our Public School scholars are now busy getting ready to try their Entrance exams. We wish them every success.

The young men of the League wish to thank the people of Laurel and vicinity for their support during the past year and would like to have their support during the coming year. They wish to make the League a greater success than ever this year and this cannot de done, without the support of everybody, so come and help the Leaguers. They especially invite you to come to their June meetings. A good programme has been arranged for each night, so come and enjoy the meetings. Meetings are held at 8.30 p.m.

On Saturday, June 27th, the young men will hold a picnic to Stanley Park, Erin. It is open to all people of both churches. Everybody is to take their own lunch. Stanley Park is a beautiful place and a good day's enjoyment is expected.

Don't forget the Boys' meetings in June. Everybody will receive a hearty welcome.

An Athletic Club has been organized for the purpose of promoting athletic sports among our young men. Comr. Geo. Hepton is the President and Mr. Ed. Richardson has been appointed Secretary-Treasurer. The Trustees of Laurel School have bought two acres of land in the north side of the village and purpose fitting the ground up for an athletic park.

Laurel Baseball Club has been reorganized with Mr. Wilmer Walker filling the position of manager and Mr. Warren Groskurth that of captain. The married and single men played an exciting game on Friday night. At the end of the fourth innings neither team had got a man to first base. At the end of the eighth innings the game was called with the score standing 5 to 5.

Mr. James Trimble had the misfortune to lose a valuable mare the other morning. The animal got on her back in a furrow while foaling and died before she was discovered.

The Methodist Sunday School garden party on the Parsonage grounds on Monday night proved a big success. There was a large crowd present and everybody was delighted with the programme. Shelburne Citizens' Band provided delightful music. C. R. McKeown, M.P.P. presided and John Best, M.P., Rev. J. R. Bell, Rev. J. S. Stevenson, Mr. Cullis and other speakers gave pleasing addresses. The gate receipts were $102 and the proceeds from the refreshment tent brought the total up to $140.

GLENCROSS.

Mrs. R. J. White is holidaying with friends here, at present.

Mr. and Mrs. R. May, of Elora, have been renewing acquaintances in the neighborhood during the past week.

The Misses Still and a party of friends motored up from Toronto for our garden party on June 3rd.

Mr. Clinton Pierson has enlisted with the volunteers and intends to spend a couple of weeks in the Niagara camp.

Miss Margeret McLaine, of Mono Centre, spent a few days with Miss Ina Bagnell last week..

Our annual garden party on Wednesday, June 3rd, was as usual a success. Although the weather was anything but favorable, quite a large crowd was present and as the programme was given in Mr. Hunter White's barn, everyone was able to enjoy it fully. Mr. Clarke, ventriloquist, of Toronto, delighted his hearers with very amusing selections by his Punchionettes and Blockhead Family. Excellent piano and vocal duets were rendered by the Misses Shaw, of Orangeville. The Misses Island favored the audience with violin selections, which were much appreciated. C. R. McKeown, M.P.P., addressed the audience in his usual fluent style. Mr. Morton was also one of the speakers. Dr. T. A. Carson made a first-class chairman and assisted very much in making the programme quite entertaining throughout. An interesting feature was the sale of an autograph quilt by Mr. Jos. Irwin, auctioneer, of Orangeville. The quilt was bought by Mr. Ed. Thompson, of Orangeville, for the sum of $8.00. We hear nothing but praise for Mr. Clarke, who certainly fulfilled our highest tropes in his ability as an entertainer. The total receipts were over $100, which considering the unfavorable weather, was very good indeed.

ROSEMONT.

Mrs. John Little, one of our old and respected residents, passed away at her home here on Sunday morning, May 31st, in her 75th year. Besides her aged husband, a family of five survive. All were home for the funeral. A very large concourse of friends attended the funeral, which was held to St. Luke's cemetery on Wednesday afternoon. The sympathy of the community goes out to the family in their sad bereavement.

Lacrosse Notes

The game last week with Fergus was a considerable surprise to the large number of fans who turned out to see the Duffs get their annual trimming from the Thistles, but strange as it may seem the shoe was on the other foot this time and when the smoke had cleared away the Thistles were a badly trimmed crew. All the local papers gave an account of the game last week and it will not be necessary to rub it in any further. A number of the locals gave a good account of themselves. Booth in goal looks good and it turned out to be a grand move when he was shifted to the nets. With Booth in goal for the intermediates and "Bill" Henderson looking after this position for the Juniors it looks as if both teams would be strong in the flags, a place that has been weak heretofore. Raspin Scott played his first game and made good. Like his old side partner, Bill Ewing, Raspin comes from the country and the showing these boys are making with the locals should encourage the other boys in the neighborhood of the town to get busy. There is lots of room for fellows of this type with muscle and brain in the sports of the town.

The management has arranged for a game at home on the 1st of July, and announcement will be made next week as to what team will line up against the locals, but no pains are being spared to get a good strong aggregation so that the fans will be sure of seeing a well contested game. It is probable that a double-header will be arranged and arrangements are pending to bring the Fergus Juniors to line up against the local youngsters, and the Maitlands of Toronto will likely be the team against the intermediates. No better program than this could be arranged and the people of the town and surrounding country are assured of a good afternoon's sport for the one admission.

One of the most amazing things in connection with militarism is the light-hearted and off-hand manner in which the militarists roll thousands of men and millions of money off their tongues. They do not calculate the cost of war in the deprivations and woes of widows and orphans, in human efficiency destroyed. A calculation was lately made by the librarian of the War Department of the United States of the cost of war to that country from the revolution down to, and including, the war with Spain. He figured it out at $11,296,385,406, not including the greater cost of preparedness for war between wars and the pension list. If tears and moans and ruined lives could be counted in dollars, that tremendous sum, $11,296,385,406, would be but a fraction of the grand total.—The Grain Growers' Guide.

LORD DUFFERIN HOSPITAL

Friends of Lord Dufferin Hospital are taking a sound position when they maintain that the County Council should adopt some fixed policy in the matter of contributing to the support of the Institution. To allow the annual grant to depend upon the whim or humor of the then sitting Council is not likely to prove satisfactory nor work out to the credit of the County. The 1913 Council voted a grant of $300, but this year's Council lopped off $100, bringing the grant down to the small sum of $200. The grant does not put Dufferin in a very favorable light when compared with the assistance that other Counties are giving their hospitals. Bruce County, for instance, made a grant of $1500 to the Walkerton hospital last year. The hospital in Kincardine, said to be quite a modest institution, received $750 from the same source. Simcoe County has a number of hospitals, all of them receiving grants from the county. Among them is the Midland hospital, which received $500 last year. The town of Ingersoll votes its hospital $2000 a year and Oxford County Council supplements this with an annual grant of $1000. The Ingersoll hospital, we are informed, does not handle as many cases as Lord Dufferin Hospital.

Lord Dufferin Hospital, as many of our readers will remember, was formally opened by Lord Dufferin Chapter, Daughters of the Empire, on Oct. 8th, 1912. The opening marked the result of five years of hard, unremitting work, during which $7000 was raised by means of subscriptions, concerts, municipal grants and other means. The largest individual donation was received from James Curry, Esq., the widely-known Toronto broker, who furnished a superbly fitted private ward, to which he donates a sum annually for its maintenance.

During the first year that the institution was open no less than 90 patients were cared for. To date 155 people have received treatment. 27 births have taken place in the hospital and there have been 9 deaths, all from incurable diseases. 36 operations have been performed and, although some of them were of a critical nature, they have all proved successful. Of the 155 cases treated, no less than 62 were from the surrounding country. This shows that the merits of the institution are already receiving general recognition. The revenue from all sources last year, including a cash balance brought forward, was $4,049.83. To this must be added the government grant of $262.65. The revenue is nearly all derived from patients.

Altogether there are ten cots in commission in the hospital. There are at present four private wards, one furnished by the W.C.T.U., another by the Women's Institute, a third by the Canadian Order of Chosen Friends and the Curry Ward. The efficient Lady Superintendent, Miss Barclay, is a graduate of the Royal Alexandra Hospital in Fergus. There is a staff of four nurses—Mrs. White, Misses Rowan, Love and Stewart—who are taking the three years' course. The nurses have the practical experience of the hospital work and also enjoy the advantage of lectures by the medical men of the town on the regular technical subjects and also by the Lady Superintendent.

In closing a word should be said in commendation of the unselfish work of the Daughters of the Empire, whose labor of love in behalf of unfortunate humanity has been the means of conferring upon Dufferin County the boon that this splendid institution is proving. Upon this Society falls in a large measure the burden of the management and maintenance of the hospital. The task is no light matter, but the Daughters have never hesitated in the discharge of their self-imposed duty. The community owes the members of the Chapter a debt of gratitude for their noble and disinterested work in this necessary and deserving philanthropic enterprise. This year's officers of the Chapter are:—Regent, Mrs. W. G. Hyland; First Vice-Regent, Miss Nellie Hewat; 2nd Vice-Regent, Mrs. C. R. McKeown; Recording Secretary, Miss Annie Clark; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Gertrude Irvine; Treasurer, Mrs. Dahl; Standard Bearer, Mrs. T. J. Brown.

Miss Leflar's Death.

Miss Lavinia E. Leflar passed away at her home on Mill St. on Friday last at the age of 72 years. Deceased had been in failing health for 18 months and her death resulted from a gradual breakdown of the system. The late Miss Leflar was a daughter of William D. Leflar, of Chinguacousy, where she was born and lived until November 1885. In that year she and her brother, Mr. Albert Leflar, moved to Orangeville taking up their residence on Mill St. Miss Leflar lived quietly and unobtrusively and while not widely known was held in high esteem by her close friends. Her brother, Albert, to whom her death is a great blow, is the only surviving member of the family. Mrs. J. W. Stockdale, of Bolton, a niece, was with her aunt when the end came. The funeral was held from her late home to the C.P.R. depot Monday morning, the remains being taken by train to Snelgrove and thence to the Home Cemetery, Chinguacousy, where the interment took place on Monday afternoon. In the absence of Rev. G. W. Robinson, Rev. W. M. Morris held a short service at the house. The pallbearers were Wm. Leflar, James Pinkney, Allison Pinkney, J. W. Stockdale, Alex. Ferguson and John Leflar.

JURY DISAGREED.

Was Unable to Reach a Verdict in Marien vs. Young

Gabriel vs. Coltman Case Partly Tried and Then Adjourned Until July 7th.

The June sitting of the Dufferin County Court was held in the Court House Tuesday and yesterday before His Honor, Judge Fisher. Three cases were down for trial, but the jury case of Weeks vs. Knowles was postponed upon application of Mr. C. R. McKeown, counsel for the plaintiff. The reason for the postponement was the absence of a material witness. The action is brought to recover damages under a lease.

The other jury case, Marien vs. Young, was tried on Tuesday, the trial concluding late in the afternoon. Roch Marien, the well-known Montreal horse buyer, sued Robert Young, of Mono Mills, on a promissory note for $300 dated Sept. 12th, 1912, and payable at the Bank of Commerce in Orangeville. Defendant admitted giving the note in part payment for a stallion, but claimed that Marien had guaranteed that the horse would produce at least 70 per cent. of colts. This he failed to do and after several trials Young finally returned him to the plaintiff, who refused to give up the note or supply another horse in the place of the one returned. The jury retired about 5 o'clock on Tuesday, but when the Court resumed at 10 o'clock yesterday they reported that they had not been able to agree. They retired again, but returned at 10.55 with the report they were still unable to agree. It is understood that the jurors stood six to six. His Honor thereupon discharged the jury and ordered the trial to go on at the next sittings of the Court. A. A. Hughson for plff.; C. R. McKeown for deft.

The jurors were W. G. Marshall, Samuel Phoenix, Ernest Myers, George Rusk, Dougal Reid, Alex. Patterson, W. J. Little, Uriah Penelton, Robt. Holborne, John Sherra, Robt. Fuller and W. T. Ferguson.

The time of the Court on Wednesday was occupied with the hearing of the non-jury case of Gabriel vs. Coltman. The plaintiff, Capt. G. F. Gabriel, who runs a farm in Mulmur, brought suit against Milton D. Coltman, a Toronto broker, to have an agreement cancelled on the ground of false statements and representations knowingly made. On March 13th, 1912, Gabriel agreed to buy 5 lots in Brandon, Man., at $200 each and made a cash payment of $333.33. He alleges that he was induced to buy because of the representations of the defendant, who told him he was sacrificing the lots which were really worth $300 apiece. Coltman further averred, according to the plaintiff, that a $30,000 house was about to be erected on some adjacent property, that the lots overlooked the city and were within 14 miles of the city hall and that a syndicate would be formed to handle the block in which Gabriel's lots were situated. Coltman denied making these representations. Case was partially tried, one witness, Wm. D. Shaw, of Brandon, being examined and was then adjourned for further trial at a special sitting of the Court on July 7th. A. A. Hughson appeared for the plaintiff and J. L. Island for defendant.

THE EMPRESS DISASTER.

In memory of those who lost their lives by the sinking of the Empress of Ireland, May 29th, 1914.

Many comrades tears are falling;
Lonesome upon their bended knees
Vainly for their loved ones calling,
Who lost their lives upon the seas.

Just at the start of their journey,
Going to their Fatherland;
Now the wound, the loss, the mourning
In the ranks of the Army Band.

Never more the little children
Run their father's steps to meet;
Never more the loving mother,
Sounds her loving words so sweet.

Earth's fond ties are gone forever
Gone the joys of earthly home,
And beneath the cloud that darkens
Hear the Saviour's welcome "Come."

God be gracious to the mourners
Lift their fainting hearts above,
In the hour of nature's anguish
May they prove that God is love.

We cannot understand, but this we know,
God's will is best, for thus He planned it so,
We'll leave the rest at His dear feet
Till we in Heaven our loved ones greet.

A JOHN GILPIN ACT.

Robt. Arnott, driver on the express wagon, did a hair-raising John Gilpin act on Monday morning, when the horse started to run away, with a load of empty gasolene barrels. The bridle broke and Bob was helpless on his high seat, while the barrels were distributed along the street. The horse took straight for the stable negotiating the turns in some unaccountable way, and landed safe in the shed. Bob's head came in contact with a beam over the door, and for a time it looked as though he was badly hurt, but he escaped with a severe bruise. —Star & Vidette.

Quite Correct.

If a man wants to get acquainted with human nature, let him edit a newspaper for a short time. He knows nothing of the ups and downs of life until he has served in this capacity. He may have preached, conducted a bank, sold goods, traded horses, practised law, sawed wood or operated a pop-corn factory; but he needs a few months experience as an editor-in-chief of a country newspaper to complete his knowledge of the eccentricities of human nature.

MADE HIMSELF AT HOME.

When He Got Through His Standing Was Unquestioned.

Robert Thorpe, an old Missouri stage driver, used to tell a story of how Anderson, the jayhawker, got one of his recruits. The Anderson boys held up Thorpe's stage near Glasgow one day. Among the passengers was a raw-boned young Missourian who looked about as tough as the jayhawkers themselves.

"Give me yer val'bles," Anderson demanded of the youth, as he went down the line.

"Ain't got none," answered the young squirrel hunter.

"Where ye goin'?"

"To join Anderson's jayhawkers."

The leader sized him up a bit.

"Kin ye swim the Missoury river?" he asked him.

"Reckon so," the young man answered.

"Could ye kill a man?"

"Reckon so."

Anderson stepped forward and spat in the youngster's face. The youth bounded at the jayhawker like a cat, caught him full in the face with a right swing and went down on top of him, kicking and clawing.

The jayhawkers pulled the young demon off their leader, and he got up.

"You belong," he said. "Boys, give him a hawse."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

SINGULAR SERMONS.

Discourses Provided For In Legacies Are Delivered Yearly In England.

At the Church of St. Catherine Cree, in Leadenhall street, London, there is preached every year, on Oct. 16, the sermon known as the "Lion Sermon." It commemorates the providential escape of Sir John Gayer, Lord Mayor of London, who, in 1630, when journeying in the east, encountered a lion, which, however, on his repeating the prayer of Daniel, allowed him to pursue his way unmolested.

In gratitude for this miraculous deliverance, Sir John left directions in his will that a commemorative sermon should be preached annually, for which the preacher should receive the equivalent of five dollars; the clerk, fifty cents; the sexton, twenty-five cents, while forty-four dollars should be distributed among the poor of the neighborhood.

Another thanksgiving sermon of a somewhat similar nature, says The Globe, was that preached at the charge of Joseph Taylor, a Paternoster Row bookseller, who, to commemorate his preservation during the great storm of 1703, that caused the death by drowning of eight thousand people, destroyed the Eddystone Lighthouse, and did damage, it is said, in London alone to the extent of $10,000,000, left $250 for a sermon to be delivered annually in Little Wild Street Chapel, Lincoln's Inn.

Annually, on Easter Tuesday, is the "Spital Sermon" delivered before the Lord Mayor and Corporation of London at Christ Church, in Newgate street. It originated in an old custom by which the Bishop of London was wont to appoint some distinguished cleric to preach at St. Paul's Cross on Good Friday on "Christ's Passion," and on the Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday following, to nominate three other divines, in the person of a bishop, a dean, and a doctor of divinity, to deliver three sermons on "The Resurrection," at the pulpit-cross in the Spital. On the Sunday immediately after these addresses, yet another divine was selected to hold forth at St. Paul's Cross, criticizing and passing judgment on the discourses that had been delivered by the preceding preachers. On this occasion, as on Good Friday and Easter Wednesday, the civic fathers attended in state.

A Wily Leopard.

No form of food except perhaps the dog—is so acceptable to the leopard in the jungle of Ceylon as the large gray Wanderoo monkey, and the artistic methods of capture employed by them necessitate no tree climbing.

Whenever monkeys catch a sight of a leopard slinking under the trees they become greatly excited and all clatter together. As soon as the leopard hears this he lies down under a bush and begins to click his teeth together.

This noise seems to make the monkeys beside themselves with terror and excitement; they huddle together in the treetop above the leopard's head, jumping up and down on the branches, shrieking and chattering. Below, the leopard waits motionless, clicking its teeth, until suddenly one of the monkeys misses its footing and comes to the ground with a thud—and then the leopard is on it in a bound.

Guiana's Resources.

The goldfields of Guiana are probably the largest undeveloped auriferous area in the world, according to Prof. Harrison, director of Science and Agriculture in the colony. He says that "there is not the slightest doubt that the Guiana's goldfields are in all probability the largest undeveloped gold-bearing area in the world. There is evidence not only that they are the most extensive, but also in places among the richest." Despite the fact that the methods employed for the extraction of the gold from the soil have hitherto been practically of the most primitive nature between 1884 and the present date more than $40,000,000 worth of gold has been obtained.

First Christmas Gift Book.

In the General Advertiser of Jan. 9, 1750, appeared the earliest known announcement of a Christmas gift book, and in this case it was undoubtedly a gift book:

"Given Gratis. By J. Newberry, at the Bible and Sun, in St. Paul's Churchyard, over against the north door of the church (only paying one penny for the binding), Nurse Truelove's Christmas Box; or The Golden Plaything for Little Children, by which they may learn the letters as soon as they can speak; and know how to behave so as to make everybody love them; adorned with thirty cuts."—London Mail.

English Freemasons.

Originally the English Freemasons were really connected with building and bound themselves together to promote the interests of their craft, after much the same manner as the modern trade unions. Their interference with the wages of laborers, indeed, caused such an outcry in the fifteenth century that in 1423 an act of Parliament was passed prohibiting "the Chapiters and congregations of Masons in tyled lodges" under the penalty of being "judged for felons and punished by imprisonment and fine and ransom at the King's will." We are not sure that that statute has been revoked.—London Graphic.

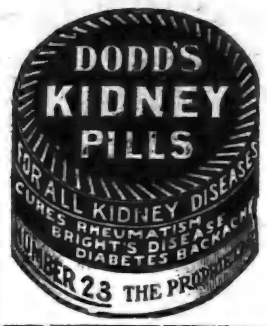
OLD MAN DIED IN WELL.

Stewart McCulloch, of Waldemar, Meets an Untimely End.



Stewart McCulloch, a man 78 years of age, who had been missing from his home in Waldemar for a few days, was found on Friday evening at the bottom of a 40-foot well, down which he had apparently fallen accidentally. James Courtney, who lives next door, missing the old gentleman from around the house, and being attracted by a piece of binder twine blowing around the top of the well, went over to investigate, and finally found the old man at the foot of the well. The old gentleman had fastened a lantern to the string and lowered it into the well, and then getting two short ladders and strapping them together he lowered these. It is surmised that he missed his footing at the bottom rung and fell to the bottom into four feet of water, death coming from cold and exposure or possibly heart failure, as his head was not below water. The well is narrow and the body was found in a half standing position, the head and lower part of the body resting on either side of the well casing. The lantern had burned itself out, so the accident likely occurred Wednesday.

Coroner Berwick was notified and decided there was no need of an inquest.

Mr. McCulloch came to Waldemar about ten years ago from Eramosa township, where he lived for many years, and was a brother of Mrs. Talbot sr., of Waldemar. He had some means, a bank book with a balance of over $600 besides notes and deeds of properties being found in the house. Some years ago he deeded his farm to a family named Brown, near Limehouse, who provided him with a yearly allowance, and who arranged for the funeral services.

The funeral took place on Sunday to Johnston cemetery, Eramosa. —Star & Vidette.

Robert H. Jupp, County Engineer for Simcoe, was instantly killed at Nicholson by falling through a hole in a new bridge.

THEY DON'T WASTE WORDS

Nyassaland Natives Exist In a State of Partial Coma.

Referring to the native peculiarities in Nyassaland, the author of "Hunting the Elephant In Africa," Captain C. H. Stigand, comments on a certain state of coma into which the "boys" descend when there is no active work for them to do, or at least when there is no compulsion to do it. He believes that the native is capable of assuming a state in which the mind is absolutely detached and not working, and when in such a state he is only recalled by a start to his present surroundings.

The life of the head man of a village in Nyassaland, when not engaged in the strenuous pursuit of his official duties, is something like this: At sunrise he crawls out of his hut and sits outside. After a short time his wife crawls out and offers him some food. He eats this and then makes his way to a tree, perhaps a hundred yards from the village. Under this he sits in deep abstraction, till about noon a child brings him some food and water. After partaking of this he moves a little so as to get the afternoon shade. He then sits in deep meditation until sunset, when he crawls into his hut and goes to sleep.

Sometimes he is joined by a few other old men under his tree. They hardly ever speak to each other, and if they say anything it is to make some obvious remark, as, "There is a dog." "Yes, it is a dog." "Oh," "Ah," and a further period of silence.

A Progressive Farmer's Opinion of Good Roads

MR. JOE CLARK, who lives on an improved road in Lauderdale County, Mississippi, makes the following convincing statement:

"I live four miles from the city and two miles from the school. This has been the worst winter I have ever seen, but there hasn't been a single day that my children haven't walked to school, and not a single day have they come home with wet feet, and to think, they walked down the middle of the road. Not one of them has been sick with a cold even, while heretofore my doctor bills have been more than my road tax. Talk to me about paying taxes to build roads. I am willing to pay taxes on my pack of fox hounds, my bird dogs, my chickens, my horses, and, if necessary, my wife and children, if they will use it in extending roads like this all over the country. I would rather have my house and ten acres of land on this road like it is now than have my whole farm on the old road like it was before improvement."

A Concrete Road

is the most satisfactory and economical road that can be built. It requires practically no expenditure for upkeep, and enables road taxes to be invested in more good roads instead of being spent in filling mud holes and ruts. It is permanent, safe, clean and passable the year 'round.

Cooking in a hot, stuffy kitchen on a sizzling hot wood or coal range in summer has probably made more women discontented with farm or village life than any one thing. She thinks of the gas stoves the city folk can cook on. We have a joyful message for these women.

The "Detroit" Vapor Gasolene Stoves

Work just like a city gas stove, so you do not have to be without the convenience of a city gas stove any longer, no matter where you live. No storage or pressure tanks needed. You can put the stove in any part of the kitchen. Simply light the burners and the stove is ready to cook on. We invite you to look at them, and we will give you a little book showing the different styles and sizes.

A SERIAL STORY

ANNA, The Adventuress

By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

CHAPTER XVI.—continued.

"Don't know me, eh? I like that. You are—or rather you were—" he corrected himself with an unpleasant laugh, "Miss Pellissier, eh?"

A little sensation followed upon his words. Miss Ellicot pursed her lips and sat a little more upright. The lady whose husband had been Mayor of Hartlepool looked at Anna and sniffed. Mrs. White became conscious of a distinct sense of uneasiness, and showed it in her face. She was obliged, as she explained continually to every one who cared to listen, to be so very particular. On the other hand the two young men who sat on either side of Anna were already throwing murderous glances at the newcomer.

"My name," Anna replied calmly, is certainly Pellissier, but I repeat that I do not know you. I never have known you."

He unfolded his serviette with fingers which shook all the time. His eyes never left her face. An ugly flush stained his cheeks.

"I've plenty of pals," he said, who, when they've been doing Paris on the Q.T., like to forget all about it—even their names. But you——"

Something seemed to catch his breath. He never finished his sentence. There was a moment's breathless and disappointed silence. If only he had known it, sympathy was almost entirely with him. Anna was no favorite at No. 13, Montague St.

She shrugged her shoulders.

"You appear," she said, without any sign of anger in her tone, and with unruffled composure, "to be a very important person. Do you mind talking to some one else?"

Mrs. White leaned forward in her chair with an anxious smile designed to throw oil upon the troubled waters.

"Come," she said, "We mustn't have any unpleasantness, and Mr. Hill's first night back amongst us, too. No doubt there is some little mistake. We all get deceived sometimes. Mr. Hill, I hope you won't find everything cold. You're a little late, you must remember, and we are punctual people here."

"I shall do very well, thank you, ma'am," he answered shortly.

Sydney and Brendon vied with one another in their efforts to engage Anna in conversation, and Miss Ellicot, during the momentary lull, deemed it a favourable opportunity to recommence siege operations. The young man was mollified by her sympathy, and flattered by the obvious attempts of several of the other guests to draw him into conversation. Yet every now and then, during the progress of the meal, his attention apparently wandered, and leaning forward he glanced covertly at Anna with a curious mixture of expressions on his face.

"Very nice claret that you've chosen, sir," his left hand neighbor remarked. "Sound, good wine. Always drink it myself, but I'm on whiskey for a week. Doctor's orders. Liver! Always obey my doctor. Sort of superstition after all, but I do it."

"H'm!" he remarked. "I've drunk better."

"No doubt, no doubt. You've been a great traveller, I dare say. Know what's what, eh? You young men do pick it up nowadays. My name's Carter, Mr. Hill. Dare say you don't remember me. Glad to welcome you back, sir."

"Very much obliged," Mr. Hill answered. "It's doubtful whether I shall stop long."

"Oh, I hope so," Mr. Carter replied. "Between you and me"—he leaned over and whispered in the young man's ear—"don't let that young woman's sauce bother you. I don't mind letting you into a bit of a most unpopular person here."

The young man nodded, and looked for the first time at his neighbor. Mr. Carter was a little undersized. His cheeks were thin, and his color was unwholesome. He had a curious habit of holding his head on one side when he talked, and he blinked continually. He was nearer sixty than fifty. He affected to be a student of life. His pet weaknesses were to pose as a cynic and to be regarded as an eligible bachelor. He lived on an annuity of one hundred and fifty pounds, but was constantly studying the "Financial Times." A drop in Consols depressed him for the whole evening. He was always "au fait" with the latest Stock Exchange rumours. Anna did not like him, and he did not like Anna.

"Unpopular, eh?" the young man repeated with an evil chuckle. "Well, I rather think I could ——"

He stopped short. Mr. Carter, after waiting for several breathless moments to give him an opportunity of finishing his sentence, dashed gallantly into the breach.

"You could soon settle her hash, eh? No doubt about that. I've had my suspicions all the time. Between you and me, Mr. Hill, I'm surprised at Mrs. White taking her in—very surprised indeed. This is really a very select place, you know—all quite superior people. Mr. Bullding there was a county councillor for many years, and Mrs. Bodham's husband—the old lady in ringlets there—was Mayor of Hartlepool."

"She brought references, I suppose?" the young man remarked.

Miss Ellicot, who had been an eager and interested listener, intervened with a toss of the head.

"References! Oh well, they're easy enough to get hold of, aren't they, Mr. Hill? Not that I want to be uncharitable. I'm willing enough to be friends with any one, but I really am forced to draw the line at a young woman of her peculiar habits."

Mr. Hill emitted a sound which was something between a chuckle and a snort. A reminiscent light gleamed in his eyes.

"Bit frisky, eh!" he muttered.

Miss Ellicot looked hard into her plate. It was all very well for men to joke about such things, but her position was a difficult one. She was obliged to be very careful.

"I should not go so far as to make any statement of that sort," she said. "Perhaps, too, Miss Pellissier claims some extra license because she is, or calls herself, an artist."

"Gone back to that, has she?" he remarked, under his breath. "Has she set up a studio here, then?"

"If she has," Miss Ellicot said, "no one has ever seen or heard of it. It's my belief that the term 'artist' covers a very great deal of ground. She's out all day, but what she does with herself no one knows. Then you remember Mr. Courtlaw and Mr. Brendon, who are sitting on either side of her. The way she behaves with them is really—indecorous. They whisper and laugh together all through meals, and scarcely speak to any one else, which at a boarding house table, where we are all supposed to be friends and one family so to speak, is not my idea of good manners. And then afterwards—you will scarcely believe this, but it is absolutely true. Coffee, as I dare say you remember, is always served in the drawing room immediately after dinner, and as a rule, whatever our engagements for the evening may be, we all have a sociable few minutes there. Mrs. White is very considerate, and she allows the gentleman their cigarettes. Miss Pellissier came in once—the second night she was here. She made a wry face at the coffee, which was perhaps not quite so strong as usual, and since then, Mr. Hill, every evening she takes those two young gentlemen up into her own room and makes coffee there in some sort of a ridiculous machine. I don't know what to think of that, but I call it a most improper proceeding."

"No doubt about it," Mr. Carter declared cheerfully. "Most improper. I wonder Mrs. White permits it. She ought to be spoken to."

"I don't think," Miss Ellicot continued, "that young ladies who are living alone like Miss Pellissier, and I might say myself, for mother is so often away, can be too particular. Personally I should be very sorry indeed to do anything which could give rise to so much comment."

"Quite right, quite right, Miss Ellicot. I am sure you would," Mr. Carter declared.

But it was not Mr. Carter's approval for which Miss Ellicot was anxious. She glanced tentatively at her neighbor. He seemed to be paying very little attention either to his dinner or to her. He was watching Anna with frequent stealthy and sombre glances. Miss Ellicot could not be sure even that he had been listening. He had the air of a man curiously absorbed.

Anna rose a few minutes before the general company. As though to bear witness to the truth of Miss Ellicot's grave charges, Sydney and Brendon also vacated their places. To reach the door they had to pass the end of the table, and behind the chair where Mr. Hill was seated. He rose deliberately to his feet and confronted them.

"I should like to speak to you for a few minutes," he said to Anna, dropping his voice a little. "It is no good playing a game. We had better have it over."

She eyed him scornfully. In any place her beauty would have been an uncommon thing. Here, where every element of her surroundings was tawdry and commonplace, and before this young man of vulgar origin and appearance, it was striking.

"I do not know you," she said coldly. "I have nothing to say to you."

He stood before the door. Brendon made a quick movement forward. She laid her hand upon his arm.

"Please don't," she said. "It really is not necessary. Be so good as to let me pass, sir," she added, looking her obstructor in the face.

He hesitated.

"This is all rot!" he declared angrily. "You can't think that I'm fool enough to be put off like this."

She glanced at Brendon, who stood by her side, tall and threatening. Her eyebrows were lifted in expostulation. A faint, delightfully humorous smile parted her lips.

"After all," she said, "if this person will not be reasonable, I am afraid——"

It was enough. A hand of iron fell upon the scolding young man's shoulder.

"Be so good as to stand away from that door at once, sir," Brendon ordered.

Hill lost a little of his truculency. He knew very well that his muscles were flabby, and his nerve by no means what it should be. He was no match for Brendon. He yielded his place and struck instead with his tongue. He turned to Mrs. White.

"I'm sorry, ma'am, to seem the cause of any disturbance, but this," he pointed to Anna, "is my wife."

The sensation produced was gratifying enough. The man's statement was explicit, and spoken with confidence. Every one looked at Anna. For a moment she too had started and faltered in her exit from the room. Her fingers clutched the side of the door as though to steady herself. She caught her breath, and her eyes were lit with a sudden terror. She recovered herself, however, with amazing facility. Scarcely any one noticed the full measure of her consternation. From the threshold she looked her accuser steadily in the face.

"What you have said is a ridiculous falsehood," she declared scornfully. "I do not even know who you are."

She swept out of the room. Hill would have followed her, but Mrs. White and Miss Ellicot laid each a hand upon his arm, one on either side. The echoes of his hard, unpleasant laugh reached Anna on her way upstairs.

CHAPTER XVII.

Mr. Montague Hill Makes Himself Objectionable.

It was a queer little bed-sitting room almost in the roof, with a partition right across it. As usual Brendon lit the candles, and Sydney dragged out the spirit lamp and set it going. Anna opened a cupboard and produced cups and saucers and a tin of coffee.

"Only four spoonsful left," she declared briskly, "and your turn to buy the next pound, Sydney."

"Right!" he answered. "I'll bring it to-morrow. Fresh ground, no chicory, and all the rest of it. What—Miss Pellissier!"

"Well?"

"Are you quite sure that you want us this evening? Wouldn't you rather be alone? Just say the word, and we'll clear out like a shot."

She laughed softly.

"You are afraid," she said, "that the young man who thinks that he is my husband has upset me."

"Madman!"

"Blithering ass!"

The girl looked into the two indignant faces and held out both her hands.

"You're very nice, both of you," she said gently. "But I'm afraid you are going to be in a hopeless minority here as regards me."

They eyed her incredulously.

"You can't imagine," Sydney exclaimed, "that the people downstairs will be such drivelling asses as to believe piffle like that."

Anna measured out the coffee. Her eyes were lit with a gleam of humour. After all, it was really funny.

"I wonder," he said, "is there anything we could do to help you to get rid of him?"

"Can you think of anything?" Anna answered. "I can't! He appears to be a most immovable person."

Brendon hesitated for a moment. He was a little embarrassed.

"There ought to be some means of getting at him," he said. "The fellow seems to know your name, Miss Pellissier, and that you have lived in Paris. Might we ask you if you have ever seen him, if you knew him at all before this evening?"

She stood up suddenly, and turning her back to them, looked steadily out of the window. Below was an uninspiring street, a thoroughfare of boarding houses and apartments. The steps, even the pavements, were invaded by little knots of loungers driven outside by the unusual heat of the evening, most of them in evening dress, or what passed for evening dress in Montague Street. The sound of their strident voices floated upwards, the high nasal note of the predominant Americans, the shrill laughter of the girls quick to appreciate the wit of such of their male companions as thought it worth while to be amusing. A young man was playing the banjo. In the distance a barrel-organ was grinding out a "pot pourri" of popular airs. Anna raised her eyes. Above the housetops it was different. She drew a long breath. After all, why need one look down. Always the other things remained.

"I think," she said, "that I would rather not have anything to say about the man."

"It isn't necessary," they both declared breathlessly.

Brendon dismissed the subject with a wave of the hand. He glanced at his watch.

"Let us walk round to Covent Garden," he suggested. "I dare say the gallery will be full, but there is always the chance, and I know you two are keen on Melba."

The girl shook her head.

"Not to-night," she said. "I have to go out."

They hesitated. As a rule their comings and goings were discussed with perfect confidence, but on this occasion they both felt that there was intent in her silence as to her destination. Nevertheless Sydney, clumsily but earnestly, had something to say about it.

"I am afraid—I really think that one of us ought to go with you," he said. "That beast of a fellow is certain to be hanging around."

She shook her head.

"It is a secret mission," she declared. "There are policemen—and omnibuses."

"You shall not need either." Brendon said grimly. "We will see that he doesn't follow you."

(To be continued.)

IN STERLING LIVES A GIRL

Who Suffered As Many Girls Do—Tells How She Found Relief.

Sterling, Conn.—"I am a girl of 22 years and I used to faint away every month and was very weak. I was also bothered a lot with female weakness. I read your little book 'Wisdom for Women,' and I saw how others had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and decided to try it, and it has made me feel like a new girl and I am now relieved of all these troubles. I hope all young girls will get relief as I have. I never felt better in my life."—Miss BERTHA A. PELOQUIN, Box 116, Sterling, Conn.

Massena, N. Y.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I highly recommend it. If anyone wants to write to me I will gladly tell her about my case. I was certainly in a bad condition as my blood was all turning to water, I had pimples on my face and a bad color, and for five years I had been troubled with suppression. The doctors called it 'Anemia and Exhaustion,' and said I was all run down, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound brought me out all right."—Miss LAVISA MYERS, Box 74, Massena, N.Y.

Young Girls, Heed This Advice.

Girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion, should immediately seek restoration to health by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Letting the Light in Shops and businesses that are illumined by advertising have a vitality and efficiency not possessed by shops and businesses that drape their service and activities with a pall of silence.

Everybody knows that it is in all ways good to let much light into dwellings, factories, ships and stables—into all places where life is and where health and efficiency are desired.

We commend to the merchants of this community the advantages and good results of persistent advertising in our columns, for the public always goes where light is—the public shuns dark places. Light means welcome and confidence.

A WORD TO MERCHANTS

Advertising will g far towards the retaining of loyalty of old customers and winning you new ones. Fifty-two advertisements in our columns will prove an excellent salesman—one whose yearly cost to you will be less than what you are now paying to some salesman behind your counter.

LADIES' OUTFITTER

George Deadman Killed Instantly.

And Four Men Seriously Injured While Assisting at the Raising of Oliver Tracey's Barn.

The barn of Mr. O. J. Tracey, near Beeton Junction, was blown down on Tuesday afternoon, killing George Deadman, son of Mr. John Deadman, Beeton Junction, and injuring W. J. Reynolds, Walter Kirby, Albert Sheppard and A. E. Hooper.

The barn, which was a frame building 96 feet long, was being raised several feet for the purpose of putting a concrete foundation under it. Nearly fifty men were working at it all day and had got the west side up to the required height. At four o'clock, when the east side had to be lifted only a few inches, a sudden gust of wind striking the broad surface of the west side carried the building from the supports that were under it; the frame gave way and all fell with a crash, the roof being precipitated about thirty feet beyond the east side. Most of the men were working under the building on the east side at the time, but a number succeeded in getting out and far enough away to escape the falling timbers; but many were unable to do so. George Deadman had got but a few feet away when he was struck by the plate falling from the west side and pinned to the ground. A number of men ran at once to relieve him, but life was extinct, his neck having been fractured. W. J. Reynolds was picked up by some others and found to have sustained a bad cut about the right eye, and the eyeball was out of its socket. Walter Kirby had a nail driven through his arm. A. E. Hooper had his head badly cut, and Albert Sheppard sustained injuries to back and legs.

The dead man and those who were injured (except Albert Sheppard, who was conveyed to his home) were taken to the house to await medical aid. Drs. Brewster and Barton, of Beeton, and Dr. Shier, of Cookstown, were summoned by phone and but a short time elapsed till they were administering aid to the sufferers.

Two men who were imprisoned in the cribbing were taken out uninjured. James Harvey narrowly escaped serious injury. He was knocked down and as he fell saw one of the timbers coming down upon him, but by a quick movement got them out of the way.

When the news of the accident reached town it spread like wild fire, and great excitement prevailed. Autos were got out and many of the citizens were soon speeding out to the scene to render any assistance that might be necessary, as first reports regarding it had been greatly exaggerated.

After making an inspection of the building and seeing where the men were at work when it fell, one cannot help wondering how so many escaped death or serious injury.—Beeton World.

A Great Sunday School Convention.

Among the greatest religious gatherings in North America that of the Fourteenth International Sunday School Convention in Chicago, June 23-30 will rank high. The Convention Temple (The Medinah; Masonic) seats 5000 people. This rare auditorium enables the Executive Committee to double the allotted delegates. This gives Ontario 280 votes.

Mornings and evenings are devoted to business and general addresses. The afternoons are occupied by conferences, over fifty in all, on every possible phase of the great theme—the Sunday School.

One important business item to be considered is the complete reorganization of the International Lesson Committee which has been furnishing Sunday School lessons since 1872. Another is a continent wide program for Sunday School Efficiency covering three or six years.

Among the most prominent speakers are F. B. Meyer and Rev. Frank Johnson, of London, England, and Dr. J. A. MacDonald, of Toronto, three prominent British speakers.

Admission to delegates only. All delegates are appointed by and bear credentials from the Ontario Sunday School Association.

A parade of 50,000 men and boys is planned for Saturday afternoon. An all-day Superintendents' Conference is another feature. In fact there is no Sunday School interest that is not fully met.

Coldwater ratepayers will vote June 22nd on a by-law to raise $6,500 to expend on the streets.

Skin Trouble on the Scalp

Skin Dried and Cracked and Hair Fell Out—Cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Eczema is annoying and distressing at any time, but doubly so when it gets into the scalp and causes the hair to fall out. Here is a grateful letter from a lady who was cured by using Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mrs. Hector Currie, Tobermory, Ont., writes:—"I was cured of a disagreeable skin disease of the scalp by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. The trouble started with itching and pain in the scalp, the skin would get dry and crack, and at times would bleed, and the hair would fall out. I tried three doctors without benefit, and suffered for three years. Reading in the almanac about Dr. Chase's Ointment, I began its use, and am now completely cured. The hair has grown again, and I am as well as I ever was. You are at liberty to use this letter, for I am glad to recommend so excellent a treatment."

Dr. Chase's Ointment has no rival as a cure for itching skin disease.

FEED THE HENS GREEN FOOD.

Succulent Grains Produce Smooth, Glossy Feathers

The value of green food for the flock has been shown over and over again to the satisfaction of every poultry man. The beautiful smooth, glossy appearance of the feathers where green food has been available shows that the constitution of the birds is improved when they have a sufficiency of succulent food. However, the raising of green food in the city where the hens have a very limited area at their disposal is a difficult problem.

In order to get the best results from the least amount of labor green food of a succulent nature should be grown which when taken at an early age will supply the desired tonic effect to the poultry. If the range is moderately large it may be divided into two parts and the flock allowed to run on one part at a time. When one half is being spaded up the hens should be allowed to run on it for a day or two and procure what worms and insects they can find. The best crops to be grown are oats, rye, buckwheat or rape. These will soon grow and will furnish a quantity of green succulent food. If a smaller area only is available, lettuce or kale with a few summer turnips will give good results. If the hens are fed an abundance of turnips there is liable to be a rather turnipy flavor to the eggs, but this will not be noticed if a moderate amount of the other plants accompanies them.

Green Food.

In the absence of enough room for the cultivation of the crops mentioned, a considerable amount of green food can be grown in flats about three or four inches deep filled with good, rich soil. Lettuce or Swiss Chard will give the quickest and best results here.

The greatly increased health of flock will more than compensate for the amount of trouble taken in raising the green food required.

THE MAYORALTY.

Mr. J. J. White Gives Reasons Why He Is a Candidate for the Chief Magistracy.

To the Electors of Orangeville

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Owing to Mayor Island having accepted the office of Crown Attorney and Clerk of the Peace for the County of Dufferin, he has intimated his early retirement from the Chief Magistracy of the town of Orangeville. In that event I propose to tender my resignation as your reeve, to which honorable position you elected me in January last by a large majority, and offer myself as a candidate for the higher office of Mayor.

In doing so it is only proper to recount my experience and qualifications for the office to which I aspire, and why I, at this time, solicit your support.

The reeve of any town is the logical successor to the mayor on the latter's office becoming vacant. I am now in the eighth year of my municipal experience, having served under five mayors, as councillor, deputy-reeve and reeve, and during that period, at one time or another, been a member of every committee appointed by council and chairman of several.

I first entered council over twenty years ago, in the year 1893, when Mr. Johnston Lindsay was mayor, and for six consecutive years was a member of the town council. In the years 1894-5, under Mayor Bailey, the present splendid water works system was installed. In that great undertaking I took no small part, and contributed in a large measure to its success. In 1896, under Mayor Endacott, several important works were consummated, and in the years 1896-7 I was elected deputy-reeve, when under Mayor Stevenson, the construction of cement sidewalks, under the present beneficent plan, was introduced. After a few years' retirement, I was again returned to the Council in 1913, and last January was elected your Reeve, as stated.

During my somewhat extended term of office, I have always advocated everything which would advance the town. My sympathetic attitude towards factories and my constant endeavor to attract new industries to our midst has, I trust, met with your approval. My work as Chairman of the Roads and Bridges Committee has been arduous and entailed personal and constant attention.

I have considerable personal stake, no little pride and every confidence in the future of our beautiful and healthy town, and beapeak your votes and influence, confidently relying on my past record.

With the assurance that if elected as your Mayor it will be my constant effort to serve you to the best of my skill and ability and to see that all branches of our civic government are administered with EFFICIENCY and ECONOMY, I have the honor to be

Your obedient servant,

J. J. WHITE.

Nervous Children.

The Trouble is Often Really St. Vitus Dance—Do Not Neglect It.

Many a child has been called awkward, has been punished in school for not keeping still or for dropping things, when the trouble was really St. Vitus dance. This disease may appear at any age, but is most common between the ages of six and fourteen years. It is caused by thin blood which fails to carry sufficient nourishment to the nerves, and the child becomes restless and twitching of the muscles and jerking of the limbs and body follow. In severe cases the child is unable to hold anything or feed itself. St. Vitus dance is cured by building up the blood. The most successful treatment is to remove the child from all mental excitement, stop school work and give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills renew the blood supply, strengthen the nerves, and restore the child to perfect health. Here is proof of their power to cure. Mrs. Geo. A. MacDonald, Harrington, N.S., says: "My son was attacked by St. Vitus dance; at the outset his muscles would twitch and his step was weak and jerky. We called in a doctor who treated him, but notwithstanding he continued to grow worse and at last grew so bad that he could not hold a cup in his hand, while his head constantly twitched, and his speech became rather indistinct. At this juncture I saw in a paper the cure of a boy from similar trouble through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. We at once sent for a supply, and in a few weeks after he began their use there was considerable improvement, and it was not long after this before he was completely cured, and has never had a symptom of the trouble since. I am convinced that there is no medicine like Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for the cure of St. Vitus dance.

If your dealer does not keep Dr. Williams' Pink Pills you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Toronto's New City Abattoir and the Western Cattle Market.

The City of Toronto will open its new Civic Abattoir, which is the best equipped abattoir on the Continent of America, on or about the first of July, next. It has been erected by men who are thoroughly practically experienced in buildings of this description, and is at all times open for public inspection. It is a marvel of its kind and is admitted by cattle dealers and all others interested to be the most complete abattoir that it was possible to erect and equip. On reference to our advertising columns it will be seen that the City of Toronto especially requests cattle dealers to ship their cattle direct to the Western Cattle Market, Toronto, where every accommodation is accorded the shipper and stock is fed at minimum cost.

Toronto has no other motive than to give facilities which should be accorded to both shipper and consumer, viz., to bring them together and deal as in other lines of business. The hope is expressed that the cattle dealers of Ontario may fully realize what a Municipality-controlled Cattle Market means to them.

BIG GRAIN COMPETITION.

New Feature of Prize List of Canadian National Exhibition.

A Grain and Sheaf Competition open to the world is an added feature of this year's Prize List of the Canadian National Exhibition, which is now being distributed. The prizes in this competition are $100 and Medal each for Spring wheat, Fall wheat, barley, oats, Flint corn, Dent corn, beans and peas. All exhibits must be the product of the crop of 1913 or 1914 and must be sent through the Minister of Agriculture, Commissioner or Secretary of the Province or State, or Officer in charge of an Agricultural Department. The exhibit shall consist of two bushels of grain in sack, accompanied by one sheaf of the same grain. Sheaves are not required for entries of beans and peas.

The other departments of the Prize List have been carefully revised, and the total amount to be awarded for Live Stock and other products of the farm and home is $55,000. The List has been specially framed to protect the interests of the small exhibitor.

The Grenadier Guards' Band from England will feature the music, while two concerts daily will also be given by Creatore's Band, the most famous concert band on the American Continent. The spectacle, "Babylon," is on a more magnificent scale than ever before, and the other attractions promise to show marked improvement.

SHORT NOTICE.

Editor of The Banner.

Dear Sir:

Owing to the short notice that Sir James Whitney and his Cabinet have seen fit to give the electors of this province of the announcement of the general election there will be only 10 days between the time any proclamation can appear in the local press of the county (which is Thursday of this week) and the date of nomination. Why has the Prime Minister thus kept the electors of the Province in the dark up to the eleventh hour before he let them know the date of nomination? It looks as if he had done so in order to steal a march on them, so as to get himself and his party back into power again. We don't know what the people of Orangeville may be doing already toward preparing for the election, but up to the present date, June 8th, we don't know of anything being done up in this part of the county especially in the back townships. One thing we do know, the time is very short and if the Independent Temperance voters of the county intend to call a Convention, place a candidate in the field and redeem Dufferin from the cankerous curse of the liquor traffic they must move quickly and effectively. The Temperance people have been loudly calling for someone to champion their cause in Parliament for a long time, and now the opportunity has come. I have watched and read the proceedings in the local Legislature during the past two sessions and I have come to the conclusion that Mr. N. W. Rowell's policy suits in every respect. The Temperance ratepayers of Dufferin could not do better than fall in line with that policy and thus make an effort to secure clean, honest government in all departments.

Why, sir, up here in Shelburne and vicinity the drinking system is a crying disgrace to civilization. Half of the young men and boys in the community are being ruined by the cursed whiskey! We also need a member in our Legislature who will at least do something to relieve the burden of taxation or else we farmers will have to sell out and try our luck in some other part of the world.

The Four Requirements.

A Dufferin deputation consisting of John Best, M.P., C. R. McKeown, M.P.P., R. L. Mortimer, of the Free Press, and E. Berwick, general merchant, of Shelburne, motored to Stayner a few days ago to try and persuade ex-Mayor Sullivan that he could make more money practising law in Shelburne than he can in Stayner. It appears the office vacated by Judge Vance has not yet been taken, and they want a good man for it. Four of the man's requirements are said to be a Conservative, an Orangeman, an English churchman, and an Irishman. In all of these Mr. Sullivan fills the bill, but, we understand, he has not yet decided to leave Stayner.—Creemore Star.

Here's Some Proposition.

There seems to be a feeling that the Liberals will not bring out a candidate against Dr. Jamieson, and the probability is he will go in by acclamation. The Dr. would, no doubt, be glad if relieved from the strain of a campaign. It would effect a considerable saving of expenses, and under such circumstances he should be willing to show a little generosity, as a mark of gratitude. Colin McDougall and Ben. Williams, both Grits, are willing to let him in unopposed, but think he should donate $100 to each of the five churches. We also expressed our approval on condition that another hundred be given to The Chronicle. Even then the Dr. would be better off than if he had to face a fight, so we advise him to chip in and act on the suggestion—that is, if unopposed.—Durham Chronicle.

A SUDDEN DEATH.

A. M. Harkness Answers Last Summons on Monday Morning.

Citizens of Orangeville were deeply shocked on Monday morning by the startling news of the sudden and altogether unexpected death of Mr. A. M. Harkness, a well-known Broadway business man. Mr. and Mrs. Harkness spent Sunday visiting the former's brother at Alton. Deceased felt as well as usual and after his return at night chatted with friends on his verandah until about ten o'clock. He was taken ill shortly after arising on Monday morning. Dr. Carson was summoned by telephone, but the end came very suddenly a short time after he arrived. Death was caused by heart collapse. Mr. Harkness was born in North Erin, being a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. William Harkness. He was 52 years of age and had been a jeweller in Orangeville over 26 years. He was a successful business man and by his genial cheery manner had made a host of warm personal friends. He stood high among the business men of the town, by whom his loss will be keenly felt. He had not enjoyed the best of health for the last two or three years, but he seldom complained and even in the presence of his most intimate friends he was invariably cheerful and buoyant. He is survived by his wife and one daughter, Lillian, who have the heartfelt sympathy of the community in the cruel blow that has so suddenly bereft them of a devoted husband and a kind loving father. There are also three surviving brothers—William Harkness, Detroit, David, of Alton, and Richard, of Hillsburg. The late Mr. Harkness was a member of the Methodist Church and a Liberal in politics. He was an enthusiastic bowler and curler and in his death the local Bowling and Curling Clubs lose an esteemed and popular member. Citizens of all walks and denominations and numerous friends from the country united in paying a final mark of respect by their attendance at the funeral, which was held to Greenwood Cemetery at 2.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Rev. G. W. Robinson conducted impressive services at the house and grave, Rev. W. M. Morris assisting at the house. The pallbearers were Messrs. W. M. Green, W. G. Kearns, G. Beswick, A. Hill, Dr. G. H. Campbell and Dr. W. H. Bowles. Many beautiful floral tributes bore mute testimony to the grief and sympathy of friends in Orangeville and elsewhere.

Patterson-Rieger.

Mr. William H. Patterson, local manager for the Bell Telephone Co. at Paris, and Miss Charlotte Edna Rieger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Rieger, of Hamilton, were married in the Ambitious City yesterday afternoon. The groom is a former Orangeville boy, being the third son of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. A. Patterson. The groom's numerous friends hereabouts extend their hearty congratulations.
